

Chapter 779 The Illusion

Liam experienced a sudden sense of unease.

This familiar scenario felt like the test from three years ago.

Sure enough, his suspicion was correct. An outsider appeared, holding Liam and Emmeline's child hostage.

"Detonate the bomb in the central area, or I'll kill him," the outsider declared in the same icy tone as three years ago.

Liam now held the highest position among the Salvation Society members who were present. They surrounded him, awaiting his command. "What should we do? Your decision is ours."

With a grim expression, Liam sought an opportunity to rescue his child from the outsider's clutches. However, it seemed as though the outsider could read Liam's intentions, tightening his grip on the child's neck.

The outsider said coldly, "Don't attempt any tricks. You have thirty seconds to decide."

The child struggled in agony, leaving Liam paralyzed with fear. He found himself facing the same impossible choice he had made three years ago, only now, the child at risk was his own son.

Liam wrestled with his emotions, torn between choices, while the outsider continued to pressure him.

"Twelve ... Eight ... Three..."

Tears welled in Liam's eyes as the countdown continued. In a trembling voice, he finally said to the Salvation Society members, "We can't compromise."

The moment Liam spoke, the outsider ruthlessly snapped his child's neck.

A red light filled the sky, and Liam felt the world collapsing around him. Liam's eyes became blurry.

When his vision cleared, he found himself back in the same test site from three years ago.

The clock on the wall indicated it had been four hours since he entered the last assessment. It was all an illusion; the past three years had been a dream.

Liam was drenched in sweat and overwhelmed by fear.

He realized that part of his memories and emotions about this dream remained.

Such a test was appalling, as if everything that he had experienced in the dream was true.

The examiner approached, wearing a smile.

"Congratulations on passing all the tests. Don't worry, this time, it is real."

Liam couldn't respond, still recovering from the ordeal.

The examiner continued, "You made the same choice twice in the last test, upholding true justice over personal gain. You're now a member of the Salvation Society."

Liam was still shaken, and the examiner could see it. "You need some rest."

Afterward, the examiner arranged for someone to help Liam recline in the capsule bed and programmed it to provide him with several days of uninterrupted rest. Thanks to the bed's effects, Liam could sleep undisturbed for the duration specified.

A few days later, he woke up slowly.

Having gone through this realistic dream, Liam found himself increasingly resolute in understanding his true desires. It wasn't that he lacked personal ambitions, but rather that he held a clear sense of purpose and a set of fundamental principles.

A while later, the examiner returned to the room. With a smile, he said, "You seem to have had a good rest."

Cutting to the chase, Liam asked, "When will you take me to the Salvation Society?"

The examiner replied, "No need to rush. Your entry into the Salvation Society is certain. Let me introduce myself first. I go by the code name Dragon, and I lead the Dragon Hall within the Salvation Society. The highest authority in the Salvation Society is the president. The organization is structured into two major branches: the War God House and the Primogem House. The War God House is tasked with upholding order and ensuring the safety of Genesis Island and the Salvation Society. This branch comprises various ranks, including the house lord, hall lord, group leader, captain, and regular members. On the other hand, the Primogem House functions as a dedicated scientific research department, focused on in-depth investigations into the properties and capabilities of the primogem."

As Liam listened to Dragon's explanation, his gaze shifted slightly and he asked, "So, where will I be placed within the organization?"

Dragon smiled and replied, "Your placement will be determined by your performance in the final assessment."
