

Chapter 806 Visiting Ulises ' Grave

Ruben, with a tense expression, asked, "Who is Mr. Hoffman?"

Rather than offering a reply, Bernie delivered another stinging slap across Ruben's face.

Fixing a fierce gaze upon Ruben, Bernie bellowed in fury, "You bastard! How dare you utter a word!"

The torrent of blows from Bernie persisted, stopping only when exhaustion settled upon Bernie.

In the throes of agony, Ruben let out a feeble scream. After dealing with Ruben, Bernie sprinted to Liam with a smile, nodding and bowing. "Mr. Hoffman, my sincerest apologies for the delay. Regrettably, I failed to rein in his behavior, causing you undue trouble. It's entirely my fault."

Having spoken, Bernie shot a knowing look to his nearby subordinate, who swiftly grasped the signal and produced a stack of papers.

The documents were the transfer contract for the Evergreen Cemetery.

Despite the assets' value in hundreds of millions,

Bernie handed them over to Liam without hesitation.

He believed that establishing a relationship with Liam outweighed any cost; thus, the assets seemed inconsequential to him.

With utmost respect, Bernie stated, "Mr. Hoffman, on my way here, I've redeemed all the cemetery shares. Upon your signature, ownership will seamlessly transition to you."

Upon hearing this, Liam nodded, signifying his approval of Bernie's demeanor and actions.

He then casually passed the contract to Julie, smiling. "Julie, please sign it. The cemetery is now yours from now on. Our father can finally rest in peace."

Receiving the contract, Julie remained in a state of bewilderment, unsure of what was going on. Numbly flipping through the pages, she was again taken aback to discover that it detailed the complete transfer of all shares.

Despite the cemetery's relatively modest size, it was still worth hundreds of millions. Julie was perplexed at how easily ownership of such a valuable asset seemed to fall into her hands.

Having perused the contract, Julie glanced at Liam with a puzzled expression. Despite her confusion, she realized it wasn't the appropriate moment to seek clarification. Trusting in the document's integrity, she proceeded to sign it. This way, she believed her father could find the peace he deserved.

Bernie finally relaxed upon seeing Julie take the contract.

At this moment, Bernie's back was drenched in cold sweat, mirroring the panic that had overtaken Ruben earlier.

A mere ten minutes prior, the governor had issued a vehement order, his voice laden with anger, directing Bernie to handle the situation. The singular objective was clear: ensure Liam's satisfaction.

In contrast to other sectors, the funeral industry uniquely intersected with government authorities. Offending the governor could spell financial ruin for his company.

With Julie's acceptance of the contract, Bernie experienced a slight sense of relief. The governor's assignment had been fulfilled, yet a lingering nervousness gripped him.

Noticing Bernie's unease, Liam spoke deliberately, "I'll entrust this young troublemaker to you. You're quite efficient. I trust you'll handle him well, won't you?"

Upon hearing this, Bernie trembled, sensing the implicit message in Liam's words. It became apparent that Liam harbored no intention of sparing Ruben. However, Bernie found himself conflicted, lacking the resolve to administer punishment to Ruben.

The rumors were true. Bernie had betrayed the trust of his dear friend, the present master of the Haynes family, and Ruben was Bernie's biological son.

Bernie had hoped that a severe beating of Ruben would quell Liam's anger, but it became evident that Liam's dissatisfaction remained unassuaged.

Now faced with no other options, Bernie, with resolve, stated, "Considering Ruben's offense against you, I'll break one of his hands and accuse him of disrespecting the deceased. How does that sound to you?"

With a subtle nod, Liam dismissed the matter, not giving it much thought. He led Julie and Asher to stand before Ulises' grave.

Upon reaching Ulises' grave, Liam's gaze lingered on the tombstone, evoking mixed emotions within him.

While Ulises had once opposed Liam's relationship with Julie, Liam understood that Ulises had merely feared for his daughter's well-being. Ultimately, Ulises had made the ultimate sacrifice, giving his life for her. Liam acknowledged that Ulises was undeniably a commendable father, worthy of respect and admiration.

Julie, visiting her father's grave as she did every year, was overcome with sorrow, tears flowing freely down her cheeks.

In a tender voice, Liam comforted her. "Julie, don't be sad. Your father wouldn't want to see you like this."

Meanwhile, Asher, with innocent curiosity, asked aloud, "Daddy, why doesn't grandpa come out to see us?"

Liam gently explained, "Asher, your grandpa is resting peacefully. We can't wake him up now. We can only come to visit him next time. Would you like that?"

Affirmatively, Asher nodded. Liam, cradling him in his arms, felt a growing determination. He resolved to protect Julie and Asher from any harm, ensuring that a tragedy of such magnitude would never unfold again.

Those who had caused him pain would inevitably face the consequences. Naturalise angeles.
