

Chapter 818 A Tense Stand Off

Liam chuckled in the face of the guns aimed at him. "You're quite bold to brandish weapons without asking. Salem is not the place where you could be lawless."

In response, the police chief chuckled sarcastically. "That's hilarious. Even though I can't call the shots in Salem, I think I can act freely here. Are you unconvinced?"

Amused, Liam said, "Impressive. I wonder if the governor would agree with your sentiments."

Actually, the policemen didn't pose any real threat to Liam. He could resolve the situation effortlessly on his own. There was no need for protracted discussions with them.

The reason he hadn't taken action was his consideration for the governance structure in such settings.

Even a high-ranking officer openly confronting the police could cause unnecessary chaos, contrary to proper procedures. Over such a trivial matter, it was wholly unnecessary.

When Liam referenced the governor, the police chief scoffed disbelievingly, "Oh, how terrifying. How would a nobody like you reach the governor? If that's possible, then I could meet the country's president right now."

Convinced that Liam was at his mercy, the police chief delayed ordering any action, relishing in mocking Liam.

Observing this, Liam had no desire to continue the conversation. He took out his phone and dialed the governor, dripping with sarcasm as he said, "Your management in Salem seems admirable. A police chief here thinks he can arrest me!"

The governor, astute to Liam's anger, promptly apologized, "General Liam, my mistake entirely. What's the issue? I'll handle it immediately."

Liam snorted in disdain before briefing the governor.

Understanding the severity, the governor's back was cold with sweat. He swiftly assured, "Please don't be mad. I'll deal with this matter as soon as possible."

After hanging up, within seconds, the police chief received a private call from the governor.

"What were you thinking? How dare you trouble General Liam? Kneel and beg for his forgiveness. If he doesn't accept it, kill yourself!"

The police chief, unfamiliar with the governor's appearance or voice, felt bewildered and enraged following the governor's scolding. He erupted into a stream of curses. "Who are you? How dare you give me orders?"

This stunned the governor, who replied furiously, "I am the governor!"

The police chief scoffed and replied, "If you're the governor of Salem, then I'm the president of our country!"

Following that, the police chief promptly ended the call. Then, he sneered at Liam and yelled, "You've gone as far as hiring someone to impersonate the governor of Salem! Do you believe I can't see through your deception?"

Observing this, Liam found amusement in the police chief's behavior. He couldn't resist applauding and said, "You're quite courageous to converse in such a manner with the governor. I'm intrigued to see how long you can maintain this level of bravado."

Given the current situation, Liam felt utterly fearless. He was confident that the governor would provide a suitable response. However, if the governor failed to do so, Liam was prepared to deliver a significant 'response' to the governor!