

Chapter 910 Gallagher's Plan

Liam's ultimatum fell upon the ears of Kingland Group's senior executives, but it was met with nothing more than derisive laughter.

Those leaders, eager to curry favor with Gallagher, spared no effort in their mockery.

"What an absurd joke! Liam, do you comprehend the formidable allies we have at our disposal?"

"Do you honestly believe your juvenile and preposterous threats can intimidate us? Liam, your naivety is truly astounding!"

"In my estimation, the ten-day countdown isn't for us to surrender control of the group but for you to run away! Get out of here immediately! This is nothing but a joke!"

"The sheer absurdity of it all!"

Liam cast a cold, unflinching gaze upon them, offering no retort to their scornful remarks.

He had a precise plan in these ten days.

After that, it would be time for a significant reorganization.

In Liam's strategy, it would be a pivotal moment, one where he would either reclaim Kingland Group or raze it to the ground, forging his very own version in its place. He remained resolute, unwavering in his determination.

Taking one last glance around the familiar conference room, Liam's eyes radiated with a steely resolve. He paid no heed to the group of oblivious, mocking fools who had yet to grasp the gravity of the situation. He departed without another word.

After Liam's exit, Gallagher adjourned the meeting.

Granger, Gallagher's confidant, approached him with an inquiry.

"Mr. Hoffman, can we really allow Liam to leave so easily?"

Gallagher's expression grew somber as he replied, "Liam may not be what he once was, but his current demeanor belies a more complex truth."

He added, "One of my operatives observed Liam entering and exiting Bowen's residence. This indicates a deeper connection between Liam and Bowen, something we must tread carefully around."

After a brief sigh, he asked, "Do you know what Liam is up to?"

Upon hearing that, Granger appeared taken aback. He furrowed his brow as a memory resurfaced, and a moment later, he inquired further.

"Mr. Hoffman, are you suggesting that Liam might also be attempting to establish ties with the enigmatic five-star general? Could that be the reason for his threats towards us?"

Gallagher emitted a derisive chuckle and retorted, "Liam underestimates me! He has nothing left to wield in this power struggle. How could he possibly contend with me? With the impending reorganization on the horizon, we must expedite our contact with the mysterious five-star general. Promise Bowen any incentives necessary to facilitate a meeting with the general. In return, the majority of Salem's profits, seventy percent to be exact, will be dedicated to the five-star general."

Gallagher was firm with his plan. "With the support of the military at our side, the Hoffman family can seize this opportunity to regain prominence among the four major families. Furthermore, we could even topple the Duncan family once again."

Granger nodded in understanding and promptly left to carry out his mission.

Gallagher returned to his office, his features contorted into a sinister grin.

He was well aware of the military's deep-seated animosity toward the Duncan family.

By successfully aligning with the five-star general, the Hoffman family could significantly diminish the threat posed by the Duncan family.

Pleased with his schemes, Gallagher muttered, "Liam, you pathetic loser, brace yourself for trouble! Once we join forces with the five-star general, the Hoffman family will swiftly ascend to its former glory, emerging even mightier than before!"

His face brimming with satisfaction, Gallagher envisioned the day when his alliance with the enigmatic five-star general came to fruition.
