Chapter 442 Mom Is Missing

After waiting for quite a while, Paula listened to the continuous "beep" sound from the other side, hung up, and threw the phone directly onto the couch next to her.

"Paul, he didn't answer."

At that, Paul's frown deepened.

A few seconds later, he stepped on his long legs, picked up his suit coat, and walked quickly toward the door.

"No, I'll go and find her myself!"

Lucia had been missing for twelve hours. He had sent his men, called the police, and waited for so long without any news. He couldn't wait any longer.

"Paul!" Paula hurriedly followed him. "I'll go with you..."

Before she finished her words, Paul turned around and said in a deep voice, "You stay here and look after Timothy and Janet."

Hearing that, Paula paused. Only then did she suddenly remember that there were still two little ones at home.

She sighed and watched Paul leave. She was so worried that her heart was in her mouth.

Suddenly, a small rustling sound came from the side. She turned to see the door of the bedroom open with a narrow slit, where Timothy and Janet poked their heads out and stared at her with big eyes.

Timothy wasn't embarrassed when he was caught. Instead, he stepped out and cautiously asked, "Auntie, where on earth is Mom?"

Paula's heart was soft and her eyes were a little teary. She took a deep breath, stepped forward, picked Timothy up, and said softly, "Mom has something to take care of. She'll be back soon. Don't worry..."

Timothy put his arm around her neck and his eyes turned red. "Auntie, you're lying to me. Mom is missing, isn't she?"

At once, Paula was left speechless. Facing his clear eyes, she simply couldn't keep lying to him. Seeing that Timothy was about to burst into tears, she hastily carried him to the bedroom. "Well, Timothy,
