Chapter 3

The room was terrifyingly quiet.

It was so quiet that one could hear a pin drop. Katty stood with her back straight, but she was very nervous.

Chris's dangerous gaze landed on Katty's deliberately indifferent face. He said coldly, "What do you mean by 'should have been'?"

Katty was rendered speechless.

That was when she remembered that Chris hated indefinite answers the most.

She lowered her head and said through gnashed teeth, "No one went into your room after I sent you back the previous night."

Katty's voice was confident and gave nothing away.

However, she had to hold her ground.

The room became quiet once again. Katty felt the seconds pass very slowly.

said, "Alright then."

If Chris found out that she was lying, not only would her future be ruined, but Tally's as well.

Besides, she was planning on settling down in Harborlean permanently. If she could not find a job in Harborlean again, things would end badly for Katty.

Katty's back was covered in sweat, not knowing how much time had passed. Chris finally Katty closed her eyes and breathed a sigh of relief. She guessed that she had bluffed her way out of the difficult position.

"Bring me the bidding plan for Ocean Group," Chris said in a deep voice.

Seeing that Chris was focusing on his work again, Katty felt relieved and nodded. "Okay."

intentionally avoid Chris as much as possible.

For the next month, they flew to different countries on business trips. Katty would Like before, Katty got two days off after the extended business trip. Chris had an emergency meeting and needed to head back to his office.

A month later, they came back from abroad and arrived in Harborlean.

Seeing Markus, Chris frowned subconsciously. "Where's Katty?"

After the meeting, Markus Hunt walked up to Chris respectfully. "Sir."

"Don't you remember? After an extended business trip there wo

"Don't you remember? After an extended business trip, there would always be a small break. The business trip was for a month this time round. Miss Minj should be on her way to meet her boyfriend."

Markus suddenly felt a domineering aura about him but didn't know the cause of it.

Chris turned cold all of a sudden but quickly returned to normal.

Meanwhile, in the motel.

Tally said in Katty's ear, "Mr. Albert didn't do anything to you later that day, did he?"

When Tally suddenly mentioned about the matter that happened a month again, Katty shivered and quickly looked at the other two doors.

Katty breathed a sigh of relief. It wasn't easy for her to bluff her way out of the matter that "Don't worry. They've all gone out. There are only the two of us here," said Tally.

day in front of Chris.

Even though a month had passed, Katty's heart skipped a beat when Tally mentioned it.

Thinking of Chris' stern facial expression, Katty said, "Mr. Albert probably didn't want a woman in his room with him that night either."

Was he double-checking? Truthfully, he didn't care about it, right?

Having that thought in mind, Katty felt a little more at ease.

Tally nodded. "That's good to hear. The girls who had unpure thoughts about Mr. Albert didn't end up well over the past years. Having sex with him isn't a good thing."

Katty didn't want to continue this conversation.

"I know. Alright, let's not talk about this matter. I need to head to the bank."

Hearing that Katty would need to go to the bank again, Tally pitied her. "Your brother is graduating from university soon, and he asks you for money still?"

Katty was already at the door with her bag.

She changed her shoes and said, "He hasn't found a suitable job yet. He called me a few times while I was on the business trip too."

Katty's father died when she was five. She was the second oldest child in the family. She had the subject. She asked Tally, "Do you want to come with me?"

an elder sister and a younger brother.

times during the business trip.

Katty's sister was already married, and her brother was nearing the end of his university education. There were a maximum of six months left before his graduation. Katty and her sister would have a lot less pressure on them then.

"The way I see it, your mother is spoiling him deliberately. She didn't pay any of your tuition fees when you were in university."

Tally became even more annoyed when she heard that Katty's brother had called her several "Your brother is graduating soon and said he hasn't found a job. I'm afraid he might be a bit too picky."

When Tally mentioned Katty's mother, Katty's eyes turned cold, and she didn't continue on

"No. Bring something back for me to eat."

The sun was shining, but Katty felt chills running down her body. It could be said that she had never felt warmth after her grandma died.

After saying that, Katty left the motel.

Katty nodded. "Okay."

Her phone vibrated in her bag.

annoyed and hung up.

As soon as she hung up, her phone rang again.

When she took it out, she saw that it was her brother, Maxim Gavin, calling. She felt Katty answered the call in an annoyed manner. "The time spent calling me would have enabled you to attend countless interviews."