

Chapter 1689 Please Apologize To My Wife

Zola became so worried when she heard about Mandy's condition, she almost fainted.

Janet hurried forward, attempting to support Zola before she fell. She felt both nervous and guilty, and her mind was in a mess, unsure of how to best explain the situation.

"Don't touch me!" Zola cried as she pushed Janet away forcefully. "I don't need your fake concern. Get out!"

Janet almost lost her balance when she was pushed. Fortunately, Brandon was by her side and could steady her in time.

Brandon's expression turned cold. He was about to give Zola a piece of his mind when Janet stopped him.

Janet felt that she was responsible for putting Mandy in the emergency room. She couldn't deny any of Zola's accusations and had no one to push the blame to.

As Janet was trying to find the right words to say, Zola started scolding again, "You were once jealous of Mandy's talent and connections, always creating trouble for her. I didn't expect you would take it further and poison her. You better give me a reasonable explanation for this today."

Zola was shaking in anger as she spoke, on the verge of collapsing.

Janet tried to reach out and support Zola again, but Zola brushed Janet's hand away, unwilling to be touched.

Janet withdrew her hand and hung her head awkwardly. "I'm really sorry that this happened to Mandy when she was with me. It is my fault. But I promise, I don't have any ill intentions towards her. I would never think of harming her."

Despite asking for an explanation, Zola had no intention to accept Janet's explanation at all. She glared at Janet, as if looks could kill, and said firmly, "Mandy is not someone you can mess with. I will demand an explanation from Johanna and Beal later today!"

Janet felt helpless in the face of Zola's overwhelming attitude.

She knew her parents were already swamped with many of the White family's matters for the past few days. She didn't want to involve them in her own matters.

Brandon couldn't bear to watch Janet be wronged. He glared icily at Zola and let out a cold chuckle. "Don't worry, I will naturally provide a reasonable explanation to you about Mandy's matter."

Hearing the confidence in Brandon's voice, Zola and Rhett calmed down a little.

Brandon added calmly, "However, you shouldn't accuse my wife before bringing the truth to light. I'm a reasonable person, I will gladly cooperate and do everything I can to investigate this problem. But you should apologize to my wife."

"You want me to apologize to her? Dream on!" Zola said spitefully, enraged by Brandon and Janet's supposed arrogance.

"You..." Janet trailed off, speechless.

She never expected Zola to apologize as she knew she was partly responsible for the turn of events. Providing an explanation was the least she could do to pacify their anger.

"Get out! All of you, get out!" Suddenly, Zola flew into a fit of rage before Janet and Brandon could say something. "We don't need your pity. Save those fake tears for someone else! Get out!"

Zola erratic behavior caught her husband and Mandy's assistant off guard. It took them a moment before they quickly stepped forward in an attempt to restrain her and prevent her from causing a scene.

Limited-time offer: 30 minutes of free reading>>

Claim Now