

Chapter 2082 Sonia Questioned Brandon

Brandon harbored an exceedingly negative view of Alexandra. It could be said that their animosity was akin to a life-and-death struggle.

Upon learning that Sonia was a spy dispatched by the Barton family, and that they had been collaborating closely, Brandon's wariness and precautions towards Sonia escalated sharply, despite Sonia's assurances that she no longer intended to harm Janet.

After Sonia had made her statement, she awaited Brandon's reaction.

However, Brandon maintained his silence for an extended period.

Sonia's expression clouded as she studied Brandon. "You don't trust me?"

"No." Brandon replied without a trace of doubt.

Silence enveloped Sonia.

Previously, his suspicion might have been justified, but now she had disclosed all her secrets and was even prepared to defy Alexandra.

And the outcome? Brandon still withheld his trust.

Sonia couldn't suppress a derisive snort. "Why can't you trust me?"

"You assert that you will no longer obey Alexandra's commands to harm Janet, but why should I trust you? What validity do your promises hold?" Brandon retorted.

Sonia's verbal assurances seemed insubstantial to him.

She was aligned with Alexandra. If she could betray Alexandra, betraying Janet again in the future was a distinct possibility.

Even though Sonia was Janet's cousin who had been missing for over two decades, Brandon didn't trust her.

Under no circumstances would he risk the safety of Janet and their unborn child.

When challenged, Sonia attempted to clarify.

But as she started to articulate her thoughts, the coldness and defensiveness emanating from Brandon were unmistakable.

Sonia realized that regardless of her explanations and assurances, they would be futile at this moment, as Brandon was utterly unconvinced.

With this thought, Sonia clenched her lips and ceased her attempts to argue.

She refrained from explaining further, and Brandon abstained from questioning her coldly; thus, an oppressive silence descended upon them.

This silence began to oppress Sonia.

After enduring it for some time, Sonia decided she could no longer stand the haunting quiet and chose to break it.

"Do you have anything else to tell me?" she asked.

When Brandon heard this, he instinctively tightened his grip on the briefcase in his left hand, and his icy expression softened into hesitation.

He had come to disclose Sonia's origins to her.

However, after their earlier discussion, he found himself uncertain about handing over the rest report to Sonia, whose affiliations now seemed perilous.

Noticing Brandon's wavering expression, Sonia fixed him with a gaze brimming with skepticism.

It was in that moment she suddenly remembered the incident where she had given Brandon a sample of her hair.

"Have you gotten the results of my DNA test? You've found my family, haven't you?" Sonia inquired, her voice laced with anticipation.

Brandon remained mute, his hesitancy more apparent than before.

Sonia had not really expected an answer; her question was more of a speculative shot in the dark.

Yet, the change in Brandon's demeanor sparked a strong hunch in her mind.

She was correct!

This personal issue must be the reason Brandon had sought her out, as no other ties linked them otherwise.

Brandon had indeed discovered her long-lost family but had chosen not to disclose this truth to her.

Perhaps it was Alexandra's looming influence that fueled Brandon's mistrust, compelling him not to reveal the findings.

The more Sonia thought about it, the more aggrieved she felt. After enduring Alexandra's dominance for many years, this was the first instance where she felt so deeply irritated by Alexandra's presence.
