

Chapter 2113 Fifty Million

The mysterious man offered no answer to Lexi's shocked query, instead responding with a cold smirk, "Just do what I say. Don't dig too deep; ignorance is your shield."

Lexi scoffed, her patience thinning.

A middle-aged woman had sought her out first, and now this enigmatic figure.

Clearly, Janet's list of foes was lengthy. Did they truly think Lexi naive enough to be their pawn against her?

She had fallen for their tricks once before, nearly causing Janet harm. That mistake would not be repeated.

The identity of these schemers was unknown to her, yet she felt confident in their ability to outmaneuver Brandon in Barnes.

Janet had always been kind to her, fostering a solid friendship. Regardless of any truths this stranger might offer, Lexi would not betray Janet over petty disputes or past grievances.

With resolve, Lexi subtly reached into her pocket and pressed the phone screen.

She had practiced this move, half-expecting to never use it—yet, fate decided otherwise.

As she sent the message, a triumphant grin spread across her face.

Uncertain if Brandon would receive her alert or how swiftly he could intervene, Lexi realized she needed to play for time.

Her expression clouded with worry. "Look, I'm just starting out here. If I get involved in hurting Janet, even if Brandon forgives me, my career's toast."

"Don't worry about that. I guarantee your safety."

The man offered her reassurances.

Still, Lexi's unease persisted. She exhaled deeply and said, "I think you'd better look elsewhere. Dragging me into a scheme that could ruin my career and life is asking too much."

Under the dim light of the hallway, the man eyed Lexi perceptively.

He could sense her hesitance to fully disengage. If she truly wanted to sever ties, she would have walked away immediately after her refusal, not lingered for further discussion.

"What else do you want?"

As the man posed the question, he sneered and regarded her with evident disdain.

Lexi noticed his scornful attitude and felt her temper rise.

Why was he so full of himself? After all, he was the one seeking her cooperation.

Suppressing her irritation, Lexi responded, "I want money."

"Sure."

The man seemed to have anticipated her demand. He nodded and declared, "I'll give you one million once it's done."

"Are you joking? You expect me to risk my life for just one million?" Lexi retorted with rising anger.

Hearing her outcry, the man inquired, "How much do you want then?"

Lexi extended a hand and waved it dramatically before him. "At least fifty million in cash."

"How much? Fifty million in cash?" The man was taken aback, almost unable to believe what he had heard.

One million was already generous for her role. How could she possibly Suddenly, the man's willingness to offer even one million vanished.

He frowned and scoffed at Lexi. "Do you really think you're worth that much? And you're seeking revenge on your own accord. Why should we pay you for that?"

"Then forget it. I'm not desperate to get back at Janet. I can handle it; I'm used to enduring anyway."

With that, Lexi rolled her eyes at him, turned, and started to walk away.
