

THE SUBSTITUTE WIFE: MY POOR HUSBAND IS A BILLIONAIRE

CHAPTER 814 DID THE TRICK WORK

Laney was anxious that her deception would be discovered. Her anxiety rose though when she saw the doctor looking so serious. Something must have really happened to her baby.

Meanwhile, Vera was beside herself with worry that she nearly passed out. She was already blaming herself for what might have happened to Laney and most of all, the baby. All she hoped to do was make Laney learn to be more sensible so she wouldn't be a hindrance to Garrett's career. She didn't want anything untoward thing to happen.

"So what is it, Doctor? What's wrong with her?" Vera asked as she nervously gripped her handkerchief.

"She is malnourished and anemic," the doctor concluded after reviewing the data on the devices.

"She might miscarry if you don't take proper care of her."

Hearing this, Vera nearly fell off her feet. A maid rushed to her side and helped her to the sofa.

Vera trusted the doctor. He came from a well-known medical family and he learnt everything from the doctor who delivered Garrett. He had been serving the Harding family since Garrett was a young boy.

"So, what should we do know?" Vera asked.

"I'll list some dos and don'ts for you as this is a crucial time for her. Don't be too hard on her diet. You need to understand the pregnant woman's predicament. Her husband should also involve himself more to accompany her and ease her emotions." He wrinkled his nose and added, "Keep her away from strong scents like perfumes." Looking now at Kelly, the doctor explained, "Pregnant women are more sensitive to smells. Some scents will make them nauseated or light-headed. Others are prone to headaches because of the smell. I advise you to stay away from her since your perfume is affecting her negatively."

"Did you hear that?" Vera said as she turned to look at Kelly.

"From now on, you won't be coming here. You'll take care of the company's affairs in the office. So, leave!"

Kelly couldn't believe what she was hearing. She twitched her mouth. She was furious, but she hid it well it.

Vera was determined to follow the doctor's orders. More than anything else, she cared about the children of the Harding family. She then asked the maid to help Laney to her room so she could rest.

Now, taking good care of Laney's health was the most important thing for Vera. Laney could learn her manners as a proper lady later.

"Doctor, could you please prescribe some medication to prevent a miscarriage?" Vera had calmed down after realizing that things weren't so bad and that a solution was possible.

Helped by a maid, Laney made a gradual ascent to the second floor. She gave the doctor a curious glance.

The fact that the doctor, whom she didn't know, would assist her, surprised her.

A lovely cake was on her table when she went back to the room.

Her phone rang as she was wondering who had placed the cake there.

"So you're back in our room." Garrett's voice was somewhat cheery.

"Just now," Laney replied. "How did you know? Is there a camera installed in our room now?"

How then could Garrett know what was she doing?

Garrett chuckled. "No, there isn't. I just can see everything when it concerns you." And in a gentle tone, he added, "Kidding aside, I asked a maid to bring you your favorite cake. Eat it and then have a good sleep."

Laney was touched by her husband's thoughtfulness.

She was speechless as she stared at the cake on the table.

"By the way, did the trick I showed you work?" Garrett asked after getting no answer from her.

Laney remembered Garrett telling her that Vera actually had a tender heart and a great love for kids.

Given that, Vera would stop blaming her when she saw that Laney looked like she was not feeling well.

"It worked," Laney said as she cut a small piece of cake, but she no longer had the appetite for it. A moment passed as she collected herself. "The doctor examined me. He informed us that the baby might really be in danger," she said in troubled voice. "Oh, Garrett, I'm scared."