Chapter 107

Everyone was startled by the sudden appearance of the little kid rushing in.

What shocked them even more was the way she addressed Tinley.

Tinley’s face still carried lingering anger, but when she saw the little kid plop down onto the ground, she instinctively leaned forward.

For a moment, she didn’t even react to what the term of address meant.

Although she hated others using the identity of being her daughter to get close to her, Yvonne was different.

And, as Tinley looked at Yvonne’s tear–streaked face and her long eyelashes dampened by tears, a wave of sour emotion surged in her heart.

She was also crying.

At that moment in the emergency room, aside from Marian, only Ian knew a bit more.

He had been surprised by Yvonne’s sudden appearance and had even considered rushing over to Tinley to pull her back. After all, she was angry, and if her fury spilled over onto the kid, he feared it would scare Yvonne into having nightmares that night.

But the moment he heard her way of addressing her, his body suddenly froze, as if something had nailed him to the spot.

The scene three hours ago suddenly flashed before his eyes.

He still remembered that Kelvin asked him for half of Tinley’s blood.

Connecting that with Yvonne’s background, his heart skipped a beat.

‘Wait! Could it be....

Ian stared at Yvonne with wide eyes.

The little girl let out a soft sob, and the familiar sound reached Marian’s ears.

Marian forced herself to sit up from the bed. Her bed was high, and lying flat with a neck injury made it impossible for her to see what was below.

But because she had just heard Yvonne’s voice, no matter how difficult it was to move, she was determined to push herself up and confirm whether it was really her.

Not being able to see made her anxious, but once she did, her unease only grew.

Everyone’s attention was focused on Yvonne, and no one noticed the expression on her face.

Marian’s face turned even paler, and a cold chill crawled up her spine.

Yvonne was here.

She also called Tinley ‘mom!

In her panic, she kept trying to reassure herself.

Given Tinley’s twisted personality, if Yvonne suddenly rushed in and called her ‘mom’, she would definitely suspect something.

But Marian didn’t know that Tinley’s heart was biased from the beginning.

After Yvonne got up from the ground, she persistently clung to her leg, swaying back and forth.

She tilted her flushed little face up, her shoulders trembling as she cried,

“Mom, Mom...”

She hurriedly wiped her tears, smearing her long eyelashes in a messy way.

“I finally found you...”

It felt like something in Tinley’s heart had been stirred, making her heartbeat quicken.

Her throat felt itchy, and the rise and fall of her chest became a little clearer.

Kelvin turned around, glanced at the young man holding the DNA test report behind him, and gestured for him to come forward.

Jeremy was in an extremely bad mood. He walked slowly to Tinley’s side and handed her the DNA test report with both hands.

Although it was highly inappropriate, a small part of him inside was screaming.

‘I don’t want to give it!’

‘Yvonne, look at me. I’m about to break!’

Even though his mind was full of drama, nothing but frustration showed on his face.

After handing over the report, Jeremy walked back to stand behind his father, resting his head on his shoulder and letting out a long sigh.

The real coldness wasn’t in the shouting and arguing.

The test report that Jeremy handed over was nothing new to the Holmes family. Just a few minutes ago, they had all taken turns looking at the exact same one.

Ian suddenly turned his head to look at Kelvin, clearly having guessed what was inside.

The two of them stared at each other for a long time, and in the end, Kelvin spoke first, succinctly, “It’s a DNA test. I watched it being done. If you’re not confident, you can do another one.”

His gaze lingered on the little child for a moment before he said, “Tell Yvonne we’re leaving first.”

After speaking, he held Jeremy’s wrist and exited the emergency room door.

Jeremy didn’t want to leave, and he asked in a muffled voice, “Why don’t we say goodbye to Yvonne?”

Kelvin didn’t stop and blurted out without thinking, “I don’t want to hear you cry; it bothers me.”

“Nonsense! I won’t cry.” Jeremy immediately retorted, clearly sticking to his high–cold persona.

“Oh.”

Kelvin didn’t argue with him.

He used to be a crybaby when he was young. After being sent to school, he would cry every day when he came home, asking why he didn’t have a mother.

Kelvin, helpless from his crying, took him to meet Melissa for the first time.

That day, he got scolded by Melissa and then cried even harder. Kelvin took him back home, and while thinking about it the whole way, he couldn’t figure out why children had so many tears.

Jeremy was still too young. After crying, he still wanted to see her. When he saw her, he got scolded, and then he cried. After crying, he would annoy him.

This cycle repeated seven or eight times, and by the time he reached fifth grade, he never asked to see his mother again.

She might have cried later, but Kelvin didn’t see it.

It was because he knew she was avoiding him.
