Acture peed upon the computer screen, and even though he had expected this possibility, Gabriel still felt a headache aley seeing the image of a little girl Relew, the party gave the commixtion. It was 7 million.

Galsel glanced at the things on his desk. He stood from his chair, opened the door, found a notebook, and took a pen that Hlowed for forework

After renning, be locked the door and opened his mobile banking apps, writing down the amount of money he had in each bank. Then, Gabriel added the numbers displayed on his laptop screen.

Twenty one million Gabriel browned and stared at the number for a long time.

The othead light rast long shadows and made his skin appear even paler. With such a delicate appearance, it was as if he was born to stand in the spotlight

Gabriel locked up at the ceiling light for a long time, then sighed helplessly. After pressing the button to accept the task, the Hight in Gabriel's eyes went out.

A comunions of million. If he failed the task, he must compensate the other party five times that amount. Even after working diligently for so many years on the edge of danger, he would still owe the commissioner more than 21 million.

Thinking about it made him feel hopeless. Moreover, his undefeated record could be broken if he failed this task.

However, he must take it. If he refused, the other party would find another person to do the job. If that happened, he could not guarantee the girl's safety

Before Gabriel heard Hudson talk about it that night, he never thought about taking this order.

When he learned that the target was a child, he had already decided to refuse, even if the commissioner gave him more money

Despite being siserupulous, Gabriel still had his principles when making money. Because he had a younger brother of the same age, he refused when he saw the other party contacting him. He wouldn't do anything to hurt a child.

But at that moment, Gabriel felt numb and suffocated. He decided to go downstairs for some fresh air to clear his head.

Gabriel was young and had no car, house, or even savings. Moreover, his brother's illness had not been cured, and he would be landened with debt if he failed. He lived a difficult life, Galiel went back inside after he hail cooled down.

Chapter 288

Hudson wasn't asleep, and his head poked from behind the door. His delicate face was full of worry, and after seeing him coming over, he hesitated for a long time before asking "Gabriel, what's wrong with you?"

Gabriel crouched and rubbed his head. His hand was quite heavy. If Hudson wasn't holding the door, he might have fallen

Over

"Gabriel?" Hudson's hair was a mess, and Hudson became even more worried. His eyes, more delicate than those of girls her age, were filled with innocent concern..

Although he didn't understand what was happening, Hudson could sense that his brother was not in a good mood.

After a long while, Gabriel withdrew his hand and patted his shoulder instead. His voice was hoarse, and his heart aching too much to speak. "There's something I need to tell you."

Gabriel's serious tone scared Hudson, and he nodded nervously. He tried to be brave.

Gabriel explained, "The doctor I found has something to attend to and won't be able to perform your surgery anytime soon. I'm afraid you won't have your surgery until next year"

Hudson's head lifted, and a hint of relief appeared in his eyes. "It's okay, Gabriel. I don't mind having my surgery next year."

Hudson thought something terrible had happened to his brother. Hence, he was relieved and didn't mind hearing the news,

It was just that when he looked down, he couldn't help but feel lost. He had already agreed with Yvonne and Anna that after a while, he would be able to run and play with them. He thought he would no longer sit and watch his friends from a distance.

However, he comforted himself. It was only a year, and he felt that a day passed quickly, so a year should be quick. Thinking about it this way, he felt it was bearable.

Hudson thought about making a wish for his birthday that year. He hoped the doctor had nothing else to do next year so he could perform surgery on him.

Hudson's eyes were clear and clean, like a pair of crystals. Seeing this, Gabriel looked away. He stood, picked him up, and carried Hudson to the bedroom.

Gabriel opened the copy of Grimm's Fairy Tales that had held the invitation and randomly flipped to a page, picking a story to read to the child,

He read the story devoid of emotions as if reciting a textbook. Sometimes, his voice would trail off while he was reading.

Hudson opened his eyes to find his brother engrossed in the story himself. In short, it was a lazy and perfunctory bedtime story session. But Hudson didn't mind at all. He was used to it.

Gabriel was only nineteen that year. He had never taught how to do this before, so it was amazing that he could do something he never taught. Gabriel read fairy tales to Hudson because there were many stories he had never heard before.

Hudson vaguely remembered that he couldn't sleep when he was two. So, Gabriel fiddled with his phone for a while, then suddenly stood up and said he was going out to buy him a book of fairy tales.

After returning with the book, he opened it and read the first story. That was the first time someone read a fairy tale to him to sleep. That was also the first time Gabriel read a fairy tale.

A long time ago, they were living in a small town. One day. Hudson talked about a parent-teacher meeting at school, and the lady next door, who often brought them food, smiled and said, "Your brother is still a child himself, and he already has to go to a parent-teacher meeting for you."

Hudson didn't understand what she meant at the time. He just saw his brother smiling at her the whole time. But those words stuck with him like a nail, firmly planted in his heart.
