of owers was thriving far better than the other two , even though it hadn't bloomed yet .

It was the rarest variety - once it blossomed , it would be breathtaking beyond imagination .

lan hesitated , unwilling to part with it .

Victor smirked . " You take the other two . I'll take that one . Or ... "

He shrugged . " We both stay here tonight and keep arguing . Plenty of guest rooms . "

Earlier , Yvonne had promised him that she would arrange another bouquet for him tomorrow . That was precisely why Victor chose to take only one pot of orchids for now .

The two stood at an impasse for a few minutes before lan nally gritted his teeth , his heart aching . " Fine . Take the damn orchid . "

Victor clapped a hand on his shoulder , grinning . " Now that's friendship . "

Their friendship remained unchanged .

lan bent down and said , " Alright , what are you waiting for ? Move it . "

They loaded them into their cars , with lan even requesting a sealed bag from the Adler staff to keep the owers ' scent contained .

A few minutes later , Yvonne peeked back into her room .

Her owers were gone . The room felt emptier without them , but she sighed in relief .

' As long as those two aren't bothering me anymore , I can live with it , ' she thought .

Reena stood behind Yvonne and suddenly spoke , startling her .

" Miss ... they took all your owers , " she said with a hint of regret .

Yvonne turned around and pulled Reena inside .

Reena glanced at the time and suggested , " If you still want to grow more , I can take you to buy some . "

She knew how much Yvonne loved tending to owers - so much so that her plants thrived even better than those grown by professionals .

Yvonne nodded and gently held Reena's hand . " Let's go , " she said softly .

Reena called the driver , but when they reached the front door , they stopped short .

lan and Victor were still there , standing together , deep in discussion .

To Yvonne , these two were nothing short of demons at this point . The moment she spotted them , a chill ran down her spine , and she instinctively turned to retreat back inside .

But it was too late . Victor's sharp eyes caught her .

" Yvonne ! Where do you think you're going ? " he called out .

He was asking the obvious , a teasing glint in his eyes as he and lan strolled over with matching smiles .

Yvonne opened her mouth , hesitated , then clamped it shut , her face tensing in frustration .

Victor didn't wait for approval - he simply scooped her up . " Let's go . We'll take you ?

He waved Reena off . " Tell your driver not to bother . We've got it covered ?

Before she could react , Victor had already loaded Yvonne into the car . By the time she pulled out her phone to call the driver , the car was already speeding off .

Standing there , stunned , Keena could only watch as the vehicle disappeared down the driveway .

' Wait . They just leave me behind ! ' she thought .

Inside the car , Yvonne twisted in her seat , panicked . " Reena's not here ! "

Victor ruf ed her hair , grinning like a fox . " Don't worry . We'll take care of you . "
