

Surprised Wife With Twins (Ivan and Jennifer) Chapter 186

"She's known Ivan since she was 11, and now she's 33." Aubree said, "They celebrate birthdays and all the holidays together. They are now no longer close because you and the children showed up. They were once in love and happy."

"Catherine's love for Ivan has long been deep in the bones, but she never asks for anything in return. She works hard to help Ivan and share his burden." Aubree concluded, "I feel like she loves my son more than you do."

Jennifer envied the 22 years they had been together.

"So, Catherine is a better choice for Ivan. She has proven herself with 22 years of hard work. She has long since become part of the Marsh Group. She's Ivan's indispensable helper."

Jennifer had already decided to leave. Aubree's words reinforced her decision.

"Just go, never come back." Aubree handed Jennifer a ticket with a bank card, "Take the card, I don't want to owe you anything. It's for the medical treatment."

The flight was at three o'clock tomorrow afternoon, and the destination was Ottawa.

"I'll take the ticket only." Jennifer picked up the ticket, "This medicine will be mass-produced for the benefit of all mankind. I don't care about money."

"Take it! Stop faking!" Aubree stood up and looked down at Jennifer coldly, "I said I don't want to owe you anything!"

Jennifer was not intimidated by Aubree's momentum. She took over the card and stood up. "Okay then, as you wish."

Aubree looked into Jennifer's eyes with disgust.

"Is there anything else that you want to say? If not, I'm leaving."

"Leave him. Never show up in front of him again."

"Okay."

Back in her bedroom, Jennifer put Ivan's teacup and the keychain he had given her into her bag, along with the half jade pendant that had accompanied her for 26 years.

These were all her possessions, her greatest wealth in this life.

Throughout the afternoon, Jennifer was in melancholy. Catherine had accompanied Ivan for 22 years. How many days and nights were there?

How much did she love him?

Why wasn't Catherine the person he dragged into the room seven years ago?

If so, everyone would be better off.

The next morning.

At the Marsh Group, Ivan was standing in front of the window on the phone with Mr. Edison. He said in a good mood, "I'm planning to go for a trip at your place with my wife and endorse your daughter's ring by the way. We'll be there soon. And we may have to bother you for a while."

"Great, you are always welcome!" Mr. Edison said, "My daughter has been asking about it. I thought you were just saying it and you've probably forgotten about it after returning to Arkpool City."

"No, I never reneged on my word."

At the priceless vintage villa in Kelsington Bay.

Pippa opened the medicine box and placed it on the table, carefully applying the medicine to Aubree according to the serial number, "Madam, when you finish using all these medicines, I guess you will fully recover."

Sitting in front of the dressing table, Aubree bravely looked at herself in the mirror. She took off the mask, half of her face was intact. The other half was originally brown with some ugly wrinkles on it.

However, after applying the medicine for a few days, the skin was miraculously awakened little by little, and the number of wrinkles had obviously reduced. The brown color was fading.

She saw the hope of recovery and began to regain her self-confidence.

She was stunned by Jennifer's medical skills, but she wouldn't accept her as a daughter-in-law.

"Mom."

Aubree looked around. Seeing Ivan enter the door, she smiled, "Oh, Ivan."

This was the second time Ivan had seen Aubree's full face in recent times. "The effect is remarkable. Your face has recovered 70% to 80%." He was happy.

"Oh..." Aubree looked into the mirror again, frowning doubtfully, "It's getting itchy, why?"

"Maybe it's the medicine at work." Ivan didn't suspect anything. "Maybe when you wake up tomorrow, you'll find yourself completely healed."

Pippa also laughed and said, "Yeah, let's wait for a miracle!"
