

Surprised Wife With Twins (Ivan and Jennifer) Chapter 215

The private jet was 30,000 feet in the air. The sunshine fell on the layer of clouds. Outside the window, the view was stunning.

Ivan and Jennifer once enjoyed such a fantastic view together before, right in the same position.

Ivan peered out the window, feeling a chill in his chest.

Jennifer's pleasant voice reechoed in his ears.

"Right. Your mother loves the dishes I cook."

"I just wanted to impress her with my cooking skills. She almost finished all the dishes."

"Ivan, you should stop arguing with your mother in the future. She must've been leading a difficult life over the years. No one can really understand her."

But who had understood you in the past several years, Jennifer? You brought up the two children by yourself. You must have suffered a lot and have been biased by others.

The thought made Ivan wretch.

He swore he would find her and protect her all her life.

Kelsington Bay, Arkpool City.

Aubree received a call. The person on the other end of the phone said, "Madam Aubree, Mr. Marsh has gone to New York. He has changed all his schedules in the following two weeks."

Aubree pinched her phone, looking annoyed.

What if he couldn't find Jennifer Brooks? Would he never come back? How dare he leave willfully because of that woman!

She couldn't see any reason or sense of responsibility in him, although he was the president of the Marsh Group.

If this went on, she believed her son would be doomed.

At this moment, Aubree hated Jennifer more.

Hence, she made up her mind that as soon as Ivan returned to Arkpool City, she would manage to let Catherine have his child.

She knew her son well. Ivan treasured the Marsh family's reputation, so he would definitely take responsibility.

Lying in the hospital, Catherine had just finished a series of checkups. The pain was so severe; she had never experienced something like this before.

Her belly had been hit. Ivan tossed her away violently so her spleen and stomach were hurt.

She also suffered an internal hemorrhage. The doctor suggested she stay in the hospital for observation. Catherine took double-dosed painkillers and felt much better.

“Will it prevent me from being pregnant, Doc?” Catherine asked the question that bothered her the most.

“Most probably, it won’t,” the doctor answered, “Rest well. I’ll remove the congestion and stop the bleeding first.”

“When can I check out?” Catherine wished to get better soon. If she was injured, Aubree couldn’t carry out her plan.

The doctor signed, “Your injury wasn’t severe but not mild either. Be patient. Stay in the hospital for a week first. Then we’ll give you a checkup again.”

Catherine had to be cooperative, although every second was like a year to her.

“What happened to you, Ms. Collins?” Linda asked in confusion.

However, Catherine couldn’t tell her the truth for her dignity.

Finnley got super busy in the Marsh Group and had to handle everything. He was exhausted every day.

New York.

The night view in the city was dazzling.

In a high-end western restaurant, a young woman in a blue dress was sitting at the window booth as last time. She cut the steak silently, ignoring all the sounds around her.

She pretended that he was still sitting opposite.

In the past two days, Jennifer had meals in this restaurant. She had friends in New York but didn’t contact anyone. Since boarding the flight, she hadn’t spoken anymore, even not to the flight attendants or the restaurant waiters and waitresses.

She was wearing the earplug in which Ivan’s voice message to Darcie’s inbox was played.

“Where are you, Jennifer? Why did you leave so suddenly? Come back. Our children and I need you.”

“What on earth has happened? We shall confront everything together no matter what happens. OK?”

“Sorry. I couldn’t protect you.”

“Please come back to me. I can’t live without you. We promised to be together forever.”

She had listened to these over dozens of times. Whenever she listened to them, she had different feelings.