

Surprised Wife With Twins (Ivan and Jennifer) Chapter 267

She looked at him for a moment, stunned on the spot for quite a while, "What do you mean?" The smile on her face froze slightly.

"I think marriage is sacred." Ivan raised his eyes, "I haven't recovered my memory and our relationship hasn't been rekindled, so what's the point of marriage?"

Catherine became nervous and the unbearable bitterness almost overwhelmed her.

Did he not want to get married?

But she forced herself to calm down and think. According to Ivan's personality, he would have refused directly if he didn't want to get married, but why didn't he?

Why did he come to her and ask in a negotiating tone?

So... he must have hit a wall with his mother.

And he can only come to her to find a breakthrough.

Catherine figured it out. She calmly picked up the glass and smiled again, "No, we must get married."

She spoke slowly.

"I've waited for you for 22 years, and worked hard for you for 22 years."

"For you, I studied in the majors your company needed and learned so many languages."

"I stayed up all night to study to make myself better and I worked harder than anyone else, just to be worthy of you."

"You were seriously injured in a car accident. I prayed on your bedside for three months and lost ten pounds."

"I swear to God that I love you more than anyone in the world."

Ivan seemed to have been touched for a moment, but his expression was still cold and distant.

He brought the cut steak in front of her because he couldn't eat anything. Asking her out for lunch was just an excuse.

Picking up the wine glass, Ivan took a sip.

"I'm looking forward to this wedding for a long time and this is your promise to me." Catherine stared at him and said in injured tones, "Now it's being reported in the news, and everyone is paying attention. Even the invitation cards are prepared, but you suddenly want to end it? Have you thought about me?"

"Just because you lost your memory, you want me to cancel the wedding? Is that fair to me?"

She was very logical and started a new round of confessions.

Not far away, Mya Saunders, who had just sat down, turned her eyes unintentionally and happened to see the two people.

She was taken aback and held her breath. Then she stared at them with squinting eyes.

She also saw the overspreading news recently about their marriage and a grand wedding.

What was Jennifer to him?

She gave birth to two smart and lovely children for him and he refused to admit it.

At this time, Mya saw a boy coming to their table with a flower basket.

“Would you buy a rose for your girl, sir?” The little boy said with a smile, “I wish you a happy wedding and happiness!”

Catherine took a rose from the basket with a smile on her face before he could refuse, “I’d want this, thank you.”

“Sir, how would you want to pay?”

She held the rose in her hand and sniffed it with joy, “It smells great. I haven’t bought roses for a long time.”

Ivan had no choice but to pay the boy on the phone, “Thank you.”

“You’re welcome!” The little boy ran away happily.

Not far away, some reporters began to take pictures frantically. And Catherine’s smile became even brighter.

Right, these reporters were called by her in advance, and so was this little boy.

She wanted Jennifer to see that Ivan was already in love with her, and that their wedding and marriage were in the bag.

Catherine’s smile was so bright, while Mya became so furious that she was gnashing her teeth.

She finally stood up and walked towards them.
