

Surprised Wife With Twins (Ivan and Jennifer) novel

Chapter 31

Pippa was holding her arm and advised, "Please calm down, madam. Don't lose your temper. It's bad for your health."

"I asked them to divorce. How dare they show up in public! He even bought her flowers!" Aubree hated Jennifer. "Doesn't she have any self-knowledge? How can she be worthy of my son? Doesn't she have any idea?"

"Madam."

"Ivan doesn't even like her. He is going against me! It's just a show put up for the media!"

"Why don't you go along with Mr. Marsh's wishes and cool down the tension between you two for a while." Pippa was worried about her, "Being too tough will make things worse."

"How sad Catherine should be when she sees the news. She has devoted her youth to the group, but Ivan doesn't even give her a look."

Catherine's office was next door to the president's office in the building of the Marsh Group.

The interior was highly well-lit, with a Nordic-style arrangement.

Holding the phone, Catherine looked gloomy, only to feel the juice in her hand instantly lose its flavor.

"Eve, did Mr. Marsh come today?" She asked the assistant with unsure.

"I only saw Finnley alone just now."

He really absented a crucial international meeting just to send those two kids to the new kindergarten.

"Can't Jennifer handle this kind of thing by herself? No maids at home?"

"He bought a bouquet for Jennifer. He walked out of the store with toys holding flowers."

A frigid man had turned into a generous husband in just a few days. Catherine must be so sad.

"Are you all right?"

"I'm fine."

She assured herself that the surest way to win Ivan's heart was to make herself worthy of him.

She didn't believe Ivan loved Jennifer; he was fighting against his mother.

The only thing Catherine could do now was to deliver excellent results for the Royal New Year's Collection project, which Ivan attached great importance to.

It would be considered an outstanding achievement for the Marsh Group if her work was finally selected.

She had made a lot of effort to get the chance through directly defeating the R-Alan, and gaining the trust of the Queen of England.

As long as she succeeded, she wouldn't be afraid of approaching Ivan.

Thinking of this, Catherine felt better.

After dropping the children off at the kindergarten, Ivan had his driver take Jennifer back to Emerald Bay while he came to the office.

He didn't put much thought into the news.

Finnley reported when Ivan entered, "Some people tried to attack our system. The technicians have done their best to fix it, but it recovers suddenly. Is it related to Alfie?"

Ivan froze with a sharp gaze. "Attack? Find out its identity."

"It is hiding in the dark, and we haven't locked the target. But we've been keeping an eye on it."

Ivan didn't expect that his son had taken such an enormous credit.

Who did he learn it from?

Jennifer?

So Jennifer was a hacker too?

Was she the person who attempted to hack the company's system?

Alfie was able to help the group today, and it would also be easy for him to destroy it.

“Finnley.” Ivan sounded cautious, “Don’t mention Alfie’s identity to anyone. Also, strengthen protection for him.”

“Yes.”

Ivan had just taken his seat in the custom-made office chair when Catherine, who wore a white professional suit dress, walked in with a smile and a proposal, “You’re back?” She greeted him in a relaxed tone, unaffected by the news.
