

Surprised Wife With Twins (Ivan and Jennifer) Chapter 401

The whole city was lit up in the evening by the neon, looking lively and prosperous.

The most fully equipped fitness club in Arkpool City was packed with people.

The office workers came over after work. The hormone smell spread in the gym of a considerate size together with the sweat stink.

Whether teens, youngsters, or mid-aged, all sports lovers gathered here.

The lavishly lit-up gym was like in the daytime.

Almost all the people in the gym remained silent. Occasionally, some muttered to each other. The room was filled with the sounds of equipment movements.

Catherine wore sportswear with a blue towel on her shoulders.

She jogged on a treadmill, and her shirt was soaked in sweat.

The sports were terrific. Catherine believed they had helped her bad mood fade together with her sweat.

Her memories in the past two to three decades gradually flashed back in her mind.

When recalling them, she felt less upset than before.

Catherine believed she was good at dealing with pressure as long as she had a broad mind.

However, it was challenging to forget a man she loved deeply.

She tried her best to adjust her mood and rescue herself.

While Catherine was lost in thought, she did not notice the two men in suits in a lounge nearby.

They gazed at her without blinking.

While sipping the tea, they exchanged a few words in low voices. However, their gazes were fixed on Catherine as if they were waiting for her.

About an hour later, Catherine walked toward the changing room while wiping her sweat.

Shortly after, she walked out wearing a long-sleeved jacket, which covered her perfect figure.

She opened the lid of a bottle of mineral water, sipping while walking.

The two men stood up, walked to her, and stopped her at the entrance of the fitness club.

“Excuse me, Ms. Collins,” they greeted her politely. “Can you come to work in our company?”

Catherine looked at them solemnly.

One added, "Our operation concept is like the Marsh Groups. We used to cooperate with them. Here is my business card. We sincerely hope you can join us."

The other man echoed, "You can have as much salary as you want. We will better pay you better than the Marsh Group. You'll also be the vice president of our company."

"Sorry," Catherine replied while looking at them indifferently, "I'm not interested." With those words, she turned away.

The two men exchanged a glance and followed her hurriedly.

When Catherine drove to leave, their vehicle followed hers.

After returning home, Catherine took a shower. She dried her hair, still feeling frustrated.

When it was late at night, she missed Ivan enormously. However, he had become another woman's husband.

Suddenly, her doorbell rang, and the sound brought her back to her senses.

Catherine was confused. Usually, she didn't have any visitors.

Linda had recorded her fingerprints into the lock.

Catherine opened the door and saw two men she did not know.

"Ms. Collins, sorry for interrupting you so late," they bowed at her respectfully. "Here are our business cards. Our company wants to invite you to join us."

They were different from the men in the fitness club. Catherine wondered if they were from the same company.

Shaking her head, she was expressionless. "I'm not interested." Then she shut the door.

Catherine returned to her bedroom and sat on the bed. The lousy mood she tried to send away seemed to return again.

She heaved a sigh, wondering if all people in this world had known she had been kicked out by the Marsh Group.

Recalling how shameful she was at Ivan's wedding, she lamented how much she had loved and hated this man.

The mixed feelings overwhelmed her, making her suffer and hesitate...

She had another sleepless night.

So did Linda.

It seemed Pandora's box had been opened to Linda for some reason.

The scene where her hand touched Finnley's repeatedly appeared in her mind. The feeling traveled through her vein and sent numbness to her heart.