

Surprised Wife With Twins (Ivan and Jennifer) Chapter 74

To get to Cayden's house, they had to pass through the village, and Spencer in the passenger seat saw Jennifer from afar.

She was surrounded by a group of children, wearing a beige dress and a pink apron.

The hairband on the head complimented her delicate face, and when the breeze blew, her dark hair brushed her face.

She stood in front of the blackboard hanging on the hut's wall, patiently teaching the children to draw.

"Stop the car." Spencer spoke softly. He was a bit shocked that it was really her.

The companion glanced at him while driving, "It's not there yet."

"Just stop!"

The car immediately stopped, the companion called Riley looked at him in confusion, and he followed Spencer's line of sight, "Who is it? You know her? So pretty."

Spencer did not answer him, directly opened the door and got out of the car, casually closing the door, his eyes fixed on Jennifer.

She exuded a maternal tenderness, and that smile was infectious, giving him a sense of relief.

Just looking at her, Spencer felt peace and serenity.

Jennifer didn't notice him. All she could see were the children.

The children sat on the small stools, each with a drawing board and an easel in front of them. They listened carefully to Miss Brooks' instructions on how to draw flowers, and picked up the brushes from time to time to put those into practice.

After listening to her lecture for about five minutes, the children eventually got their hands on drawing one by one.

Jennifer unintentionally raised her eyes and saw an unfamiliar car parked not far away, and a familiar person standing next to it.

Their eyes met, and Jennifer froze, as she thought she was hallucinating.

A smile played over Spencer's lips. He put down the arms crossed in front of his chest and walked toward her.

"Miss Brooks' class was just wonderful." Standing beside her, he spoke, "Would you mind taking an extra student?"

His proactive attitude surprised Jennifer, and she smiled and nodded, "Of course!"

The brilliant sunlight seeping through the gaps between the leaves, her smile dazzled him for a while.

Time seemed to have stopped, in the light breeze, only the lush old tree rustling its leaves.

...

In Bright Star Kindergarten, Downtown

The sun was shining and outdoor activities were usually held here to get the kids closer to nature.

Alfie did not like to play games that seem stupid to him. He sat on a small stone bench next to the slide and operated on a tablet. No one knew what he was doing.

In the eyes of the other children in kindergarten, Alfie was a weirdo who did not fit in.

He was looking at his tablet every day. They all thought he was obsessed with playing mobile games.

"The teacher is handing out cakes!"

A kid called out, and one after one the children who were playing went to the table not far away to get the cakes.

Alfie also liked to eat cake, so he looked up, put the tablet down and went with the children to fetch his share.

Three seconds later, a child coming out of a long slide saw the tablet as he stood up.

He went over with curiosity and took it away directly, still poking randomly at the screen while walking.

And Kyle, a programmer at R-Alan, happened to be near the kindergarten when his phone rang with a special beep. He rushed to check on it. Then he stopped, staring at the screen with wide eyes.

The signal was strong!

The location was right in the kindergarten!

He looked in the direction of the kindergarten and thought calmly for a few seconds.

And at this time, Ivan was also at a nearby clubhouse, where he had just finished a meeting with the president of South Africa and nailed a big project.

Finnley was also at his side, "Sir, are we going back now?"

"Buy some snacks and mangoes nearby, and I'll check on the kids at the kindergarten." Ivan's face was gentle, and that expression full of happiness just seemed like bragging in Finnley's eyes.

"Okay, I'll go to the store."

"No." Ivan said, "I'll buy them myself."

“Then let me accompany you.”

The two walked towards a nearby fruit store.

By this time, Kyle of R-Alan had found a way to sneak into the kindergarten and was getting closer to the location shown on his phone.

The kid stole the tablet, so naturally he would avoid the crowd and went to a quiet place.

Kyle followed the kid to a secluded corner, and he strode forward to cover the kid’s mouth and dragged him straight away!

Alfie walked towards the stone bench while eating the cake, “Yummy.”

The moment he raised his head, he gasped, stunned on the spot as he looked at the empty stone table.

Where was the tablet?