Chapter 3651

“I guess I still underestimated the nine of you,” a familiar voice was heard from ahead.

Morine appeared in front of them again. At that moment, the nine of them were no longer as prideful in his presence. They seemed to all back off at the same moment, a subconscious movement caused by their fear.

Case gulped. No matter how proud he was, no matter how much he looked down on warriors from thirdgrade worlds, he had just seen Morine’s tremendous strength.

He could not look down on Morine at all. He had to concede that he was incredibly strong.

He gritted his teeth and said, "If I knew your truest potential, I would've never gone against you. Ugh, can't go back and change things now... There's only one thing to do now."

As he said all of that, Case's eyes widened as he glared right at George.

At that moment, Morine's complexion was slightly paler than before. He was clearly injured, yet he managed to somehow stand.

Case could not tell if Morine's injuries were heavy, but the situation was bad for them. The fact that Morine did not run away and stood in front of them bravely meant that he was confident in himself.

If they had not witnessed Morine's skills before, Case would have thought that Morine facing them headon was a sign of pure idiocy. However, he no longer dared to underestimate George.

Morine had already taught him a huge lesson; he already knew the consequences of underestimating him. Of course, Case was glad that he had nine companions. If they had just one less person on their side, they would never be able to stand against George.

Case took a deep breath and said, "You predicted our plan?"

This was what Case wanted to ask the whole time. It had been such a tense situation and the fight had started instantly, so Case never had the chance to ask it. At that moment, he was still thinking about starting the fight immediately, so he took the chance to ask what was on his mind. Morine laughed, looking at Case like an idiot. "So you thought I was crazy the whole time to have participated in the fog search battlefield with you? That I joined because I was just too arrogant and full of myself?”

Case’s lips twitched, not answering Morine’s question.

Morine did not need an answer either. He could immediately tell what the answer was from Case’s expression.

These people truly did think that way. Morine burst into laughter, but his laughter was dark, dripping with disdain.

He took a deep breath and looked at them with amusement. “I wasn’t the one full of myself; you guys were. Those who don’t know their place would’ve died outside of Cloud City. How could they have been able to survive until they reached this place? This is a level-three city, not a level-nine city...”

“One can only reach this place after going through various challenges. Do you really think anyone who manages to reach this place would be a fool? You probably even thought that I stubbornly entered the fog search battlefield with you because I didn’t want to embarrass myself, which is even more hilarious.”

“Who do you think you are to be worth me doing that? From the start, you were nothing to me. Fifteen men are just fifteen skeleton badges. I’ll be able to get something amazing from it, though.”

The expressions of Case and the others darkened.

Morine finally voiced his inner thoughts, which humiliated them even more.
