Chapter 1041

In his heart, she gradually felt more and more unease.

When she invited Ms. Armstrong to the Capital for a charity party, she didn't expect such a tragedy to happen.

After everything that had happened, these things were not something she could bear alone.

Without hesitation, she picked up her phone and dialed Karl's number.

It took many rings before Karl answered. Apparently he lowered his voice and asked, "What's wrong?"

"You're in a meeting?" Juanita sensed that he was in an unusual environment.

"Right. You're in a hurry?" He asked.

This morning, after Joyce dropped Anderson off at the kindergarten, she rested a little longer at home.

She had been distracted and hadn't slept well since she received Otis' call at night.

After dropping Anderson off in the morning, she lay down in a daze and took a nap.

When she got up it was almost noon.

She ate some sandwiches and milk and turned on the TV. She wanted to know what was going on about the case of Mr. Clark.

Unexpectedly, the channel was broadcasting another story.

"This morning, on the shallows downstream the reservoir a body of a female was found. The dead was about sixty years old, 5'1", and her name remains unknown. According to the police, she might have lost footing and ended up drowning. If you have any information, please contact the Capital Police Department in time."

The scene then was switched to the reservoir, and the body covered with a white cloth, lying on the shore. The rippling surface of the lake looked so calm, as if nothing had happened.

Joyce gently frowned and did not pay much attention. Nowadays the society was under great pressure, and from time to time there were always people who would choose end their life, so it was nothing unusual.

She paused for a moment and decided to explain clearly what happened before, "I am sorry that I refused Mr. Henderson's financing offer last time. Mr. Henderson, the reason why I chose to work with R&S Group is because of some of my personal reasons. I have absolutely no ill will towards Mr. Henderson, and I hope Mr. Henderson can understand."

"Oh, Ms. Knowles is saying that she chose Mr. Warner because she had a personal relationship with him?"

On the phone, a cold laugh came from the voice.

Joyce froze.

At the charity party, Justin also mistook her for Luther's new love. Moreover, Luther took it upon himself to hold her hand, which she found out too late, and probably Justin saw it too.

"No, Mr. Henderson, it's really just a partnership between me and Mr. Warner." Joyce was instantly a little anxious. She knew Justin's character and was especially afraid that he would keep going down the wrong path. He was simply too obsessed.

After thinking about it, she simply said, "Mr. Henderson, I'm not going to lie to you. We are just a small company at the moment, and we value word of mouth more than financing operations. I am not good at expanding the company and entering the capital market. These are not my strong points, and I would love to be in the business of the military because of the long term stability."

She paused and continued, "You can't get around the R&S Group if you want to do business with Otis. I'm sorry, Mr. Henderson, but I'm not a very ambitious woman. I also felt terrified to refuse your financing offer."

Meanwhile.

Cecelia sat in her exclusive office. The dazzling sunlight was spilling over the desk, and she could not even read the documents very clearly due to the bright sunlight.

She leaned back in her chair and looked at the business card in her hand in a daze.

Zora Knowles.

She had been thinking so much since the day she met Zora at a piano concert at the Capital Opera.

At that time, she saw clearly that the pendant Zora was wearing around her neck, both in shape and material, was exactly the same as the one she had put on her newborn daughter.

The key thing was that the Silversword emblem, was the Hurley family emblem and no one but the Hurley family would ever use that emblem.

She had her doubts, too.

She might be wrong.

After all, the pendant on Zora's neck looked so new, and the pattern was so clear. If it was the pendant she had at the beginning, twenty years had passed, and it could not have the same color now. Silver would oxidize and would blacken, and the traces of age would gradually wear the pattern on it.

She thought for a moment and added, "You could say that I did it to show my gratitude to her for saving me."

"Okay, Ms. Cecelia," Frank nodded and took the card.

He just turned around and intended to leave.

"Wait." Cecelia suddenly called out to him again.

Frank turned back suspiciously, "Ms. Cecelia, is there anything else?"

Cecelia raised her eyes, and her expression was very serious, "Keep it a secret for me. Even my family. Don't let them know either."

Frank froze slightly and subconsciously glanced at the business card in his hand.

Who could this Zora Knowles be? President of JK Intelligence? But Cecelia seldom cared much about what's going on outside and rarely dealt with people from the outside world.

What kind of person would that be? Ms. Cecelia seemed to approached her so eagerly, and wanted to keep it strictly confidential?

Of course, it was his duty to serve Cecelia, and he wouldn't ask more questions even if he was curious.

Cecelia said with a serious tone, "Michal, it's you? What a surprise it is that you would call me. I've been looking for an opportunity to visit you, and I just can't find the right chance. I'm really sorry. I met Karl in Khebury four years ago. Time flies, and he is now already a grownup. Excellent talker and sharp thinker. You have raised him so well."

Cecelia took the initiative to ramble on.

Michal laughed over the phone, "You are too kind. We are relatives anyhow, and I have not visited you all these years, and I feel so bad about that."

"Michal, how have you been?" Cecelia asked in a soft voice.

"I'm fine. I'm calling you today to tell you some good news." Michal was in a very good mood.

"Oh, what's that?" Cecelia raised her voice, slightly excited.

"My son is getting married, and I'm calling you to ask when it will be convenient for you. I'll send you an invitation and pay you a visit on the way." Michal said happily.

Is Karl getting married?" Cecelia got up from her chair, "Great, best wishes from the bottom of my heart. Which girl

Charlotte was actually upset. Since she had been in frequent contact with Luther lately, she had new ideas and she had become unwilling to have Otis' baby.

So, naturally, she did not take her supplements on time.

Since Cecelia mentioned it, she couldn't say anything, so she took the soup and took a few sips casually.

She asked again, "Mom, are you back for something?"

"Oh, I'm coming back to get changed, and I have to meet someone this afternoon." Cecelia said back.

Charlotte looked up, puzzled, "Who is that? Someone important?"

Because Cecelia usually would just wear something more casual, whoever it was, it must not be someone ordinary so that Cecelia would have to purposely come back to get changed.

"Well, you don't really know her. It's Michal," Cecelia added, "Sort of the in-laws of theHeath family."

"I know. The Cole family holds the third largest construction company in the country. It seems to be Grandma's family, right?" Charlotte was immediately alerted. She remembered all about the Cole family.

Cecelia came out of the kitchen, saw Charlotte's back shaking slightly, and went forward with concern, "Charlotte, what's wrong with you?"

"It's a little cold." Charlotte turned around with a full smile back on her face.

"Oh, I'll go up and get you a shawl. Should I turn the heater on in the house?" Cecelia said with concern, "It's a very special time, and you mustn't catch a cold."

"Mom, it's rare for you to come back and keep me company, and I'm so bored by myself. Do you have to go to the Cole residence? Can't you send someone to fetch an invitation?" Charlotte tugged on Cecelia's arm and pouted.

In fact, today Cecelia suddenly mentioned something about going to the Cole residence.

She really wanted to stop it.

Four years had passed and she had forgotten about it. Today, she remembered again that she pushed Rodney down the stairs.

Rodney had kept a photo of Mia privately.

She had seen the photo, and Joyce and Mia looked just the same. Just a look at the photo would make anyone think Joyce might be related to the Cole family.

At that, she walked up the stairs with a full stride.

Cecelia changed into an oatmeal-colored cashmere suit with a perfect design that was simple yet showed a good taste.

And then she chose a soft lambskin cloud bag, which suited her low-key luxury style.

Walking down the stairs, she handed the shawl to Charlotte and reminded, "Stay at home and have a good rest, and I'll be back with you tonight."

Charlotte reclined on the sofa. Although she felt upset, there was nothing she could do.

She knew Cecelia's temper was straightforward and could not be argued with.

Right now, she could only hope that everything could turn out just alright and she had been just overthinking.

"What happened to Rodney ... I didn't know until I saw the obituary. It's a shame, eh." Michal lamented.

"I'm sorry, but because of the special circumstances of our family, the somewhat unstable condition of the military at the time, we did not inform anyone and we just buried Rodney. Only a few people who were around all the time did the simplest of ceremonies." Cecelia explained why the Cole family was not notified at the time.

"I understand." Michal nodded gently.

"By the way, here's the invitation." Michal handed the invitation to Cecelia.

Cecelia opened it and looked at it with admiration in her eyes, "Your son is a talented and capable man, and now he is happily married. Where is he now? It looks like he has returned to the Capital?"

"Yes, he finally came back from Khebury. Now he's in the House of Inspection Special Investigation Unit," Michal said with a big smile, "It's a long story, but he had a falling out with us and had to run away to Khebury on his own to become a detective.
