Chapter 141

The following morning.

Automotive project design team meeting room.

The first draft of the one-piece casting design had been completed. At 10 o'clock, Joyce would present the concept and some details of this design.

In the meeting room, Juanita was passing out information and preparing green tea.

Professor Owens, who was in his sixties and a veteran of the automotive manufacturing industry, came early and seated in the conference room where the main speakers were seated.

All other colleagues were seated one after another.

Joyce was standing on the podium, organizing materials, setting up projection equipment, and connecting computers.

Since this meeting did not involve promotion, people from the promotion department did not need to attend.

Today would be the day you would lose your reputation. Let's see how long you could still fool around.

On the podium, Joyce had already set up all the equipment.

On the electronic screen in the meeting room, her pre-made PowerPoint report was displayed.

At that moment, the door of the conference room was gently pushed open.

The one was none other than Luther.

"Good day to the president." Everyone got up and said respectfully.

Luther nodded gently and walked straight to the main seat to Professor Owens' left and sat down, politely greeting Professor Owens, "Hello, Professor Owens."

However wealthy he might be, he still respected a scholar like Professor Owens. It was especially hard to have a groundbreaking figure like Professor Owens who was dedicated to research.

Joyce was at the podium and glanced at Luther.

Did he not sleep well last night? The blue circles under his eyes were just obvious, and he didn't look very good, and his handsome face looked slightly tired.

Casey took out his iPad, turned on the screen, walked quickly between Professor Owens and Luther, and handed it to them.

In the image, the Ballard family group car promotion department revealed several details of their new integrated casting design, which looked largely the same as Joyce's design.

"The Ballard group suddenly held a press conference today at ten o'clock. I received the news just now." Casey said with a gloomy expression.

"How is that possible?" Luther was surprised, "Never heard of the Ballard group having this project."

"Isn't this Joyce's design? Was it stolen?" Professor Owens raised his gold-rimmed glasses, his voice full of exasperation. The academic world most resented plagiarism and theft.

At this point, Shelly smiled in triumph. Finally, the good show she had planned was about to begin.

"Who says there's no proof? I've got proof." Shelly proudly took out her phone, opened the photo album, and showed everyone the photos she took yesterday afternoon of Joyce getting out of the Christian's Aston Martin sports car.

Joyce frowned slightly.

Christian was a real disaster. What else would he do but cause her trouble? She must stay away from him in the future.

"I'm sure there must be an explanation. The Joyce that I know would never do that." Professor Owens spoke out for Joyce.

Joyce looked at Professor Owens gratefully. Only Professor Owens could appreciate her talent. After she retired from the shooting range, she was once depressed, and it was Professor Owens who discovered her talent and gave her affirmation and encouragement, so she could go all the way to today with confidence.

She cast a grateful look at Professor Owens and conveyed her innocence.

Professor Owens understood and he stood up, "Since there is no more meeting, I will go back to the university research office first. Just let me know by phone when the misunderstanding is cleared." After saying that, he lifted his briefcase and took the lead to leave the conference room. For the rest of the office battle, he did not need to waste time participating.

"Professor Owens, I'm going to see you off." The rest of the colleagues hurriedly followed and sent Professor Owens out the door.

It was clear that the last time Jacqueline pretended to be hurt by her, he saw through it right away. He did not accuse her wrongly and even comforted her afterward.

She thought that he should be the one to understand her and know her. Could it be that after all these things, she was still, in his heart, just a woman who could sell everything for money?

This was the man that she put her best foot forward and sacrificed her virginity to save. Was this how he saw her?

She looked at him incredulously.

The eyes were full of disappointment, consternation, doubt, questioning, disbelief, and a hint of vague pain.

At that moment, Luther met her gaze.

He closed his fists tightly. As if he was stung deeply by her gaze.

But he saw her get into Christian's sports car with his own eyes and heard her lie with his own ears.

"Search it. Also, get the surveillance from last night." Joyce stared coldly at Luther, "Hopefully, you won't regret it."

Shelly turned toward Charlotte and said smugly, "Joyce is done this time. Just wait and see what happens."

Charlotte looked at Shelly suspiciously. She could not know Shelly better. A brainless daughter from a wealthy family. How could she do anything great? She better not be a failure. However, when she looked at Shelly's confident look, she had a few expectations.

Casey opens Joyce's desk.

He went through each drawer carefully. Except for some personal items, most of them were just documents and folders. There was a suspicious folder indeed, and a black suspicious cloth bag.

He opened the folder and his face changed as he flipped through it.

Then he opened the black cloth bag, his eyes darkened, his face more gloomy.

Casey picked up the two items and returned to the conference room, where Shelly followed up with Charlotte.

Casey placed the folder and black cloth bag on the conference table and asked, "Luther, please check it. Do you need everyone else to step back?" At this moment, he still hoped that the president and his wife could close the door and solve the matter by themselves. After all, so many outsiders were present.

Joyce picked up the remaining five stacks of money and tossed them into the air with force.

"Wow."

Inside the office, there was a commotion. There were all 500 bills fluttering in the air just like snowflakes. Silent and still, the scene shocked the crowd.

In fact, it was Joyce's own money. She had not found Justin. In the end, she had to go to the hospital and asked for a refund. Paying the cost of hospitalization and examination, as well as compensation for the loss of the hospital's pre-prepared surgical materials, she still got 800,000 back. She took the 300,000 out in cash and deposited the rest in her own account.

The $300,000, which she kept in her office, was meant to be returned to Luther sometime.

Since it was exposed today, she could simply give it back to him.

It was not bad actually, since from now on, she didn't owe him any money.

"Brother, it's late! Why don't you have lunch with me? There's a great steak house across the street." Shelly intimately went up to hold Luther with one hand, and the other hand of hers held Charlotte beside her, "Ask Charlotte to join you. She's got a baby now. And look how thin she is, she needs to eat more."

Charlotte ducked her head in shame; he hadn't looked her in the eye today. She was full of anticipation; Luther had never eaten with her before.

Luther looked sideways at Charlotte, only to see her thin chiseled face, scarlet cheeks, and watery eyes. She looked just pitiful.

She was carrying a child and he never asked about her.

But he was so distracted that he didn't have the heart to eat.

He brushed Shelly's hand away and refused, "You can go with her. I have things to do."

The sense of responsibility always made him feel a little guilty, and he said to Charlotte, "You eat more and take care of yourself."

Hearing his concern for herself, Charlotte smiled and nodded her head in a hurry.

The two had a bowl of ravioli at a roadside restaurant and took a taxi to the Warner family.

Mr. Arnold was at home when he came out and opened the door for Joyce and called respectfully, "Ma'am."

"Mr. Arnold, this is my friend from the group. We are here to copy some company information and will leave soon." Joyce said.

"Please come in." Mr. Arnold politely invited Juanita inside, "I'll make some tea."

"Oh, no, don't worry about that." Juanita waved her hand in a hurry. The Warner family was so big and luxurious, that she couldn't help but stagger a bit.

"It's my pleasure." Mr. Arnold bent down respectfully.

Joyce entered the house and asked Juanita to take a seat in the living room.

After a long struggle, Charlotte didn't want to miss the good show, so she walked into the conference room anyway.

Luther and Casey happened to be walking to the conference room. They bumped into Charlotte head-on.

Luther glanced at Charlotte unhappily, "What are you doing here?"

"I, I'm waiting for Shelly," she said, standing in the doorway, a little embarrassed, and didn't know what she should do next.

It might seem a bit nosy if she went in, yet she would never want to miss such a good chance to witness Joyce's suffering.

Finally, since Luther said nothing more, she dashed after him into the conference room and stood by the door waiting for Shelly.

Luther's face was gloomy and he did not say a word.

Casey stepped forward and pulled out the seat for Luther.

He stood beside Luther and said to Joyce, "We are all ready."
