She desperately shook her head, and bean-sized teardrops rolled down in bunches. She could not find an excuse, shaking her head constantly, "I do not go, I do not go ..."

"What, are you afraid?" Luther looked disdainful and jerked her loose, casually pulling over a few napkins and wiping the fingers that had just touched her.

Charlotte's fearful and frightened expression was even more equivalent to an admission of the truth. He only hated himself, blinded by her pretended innocence, and only now saw through the truth. Let Joyce suffer so much aggravation, he regretted it all so much.

Right now he just wanted to make up to Joyce and make up for everything he did wrong.

And this dirty disgusting woman in front of him only made him want to vomit.

"I've respected the Heath family enough by not exposing you in public. Tomorrow I will personally call Mr. Heath and your mother to explain to them. I will keep it quiet and let the Heath family work it out on their own. It is my bottom line."

He tossed the napkin he had wiped his hands with, throwing it contemptuously at her tear-stained face.

St. Maria Hospital.

Luther seemed to have had a really long dream in which many things happened, entangled and complicated, but really when he woke up, his mind was blank, completely unable to remember the contents of the dream.

The dazzling golden sunlight shone in through the slits in the snow-white blinds.

The light was so bright that it was hard to open his eyes. It took him a long time to get used to it before he finally reluctantly opened his dark eyes and looked around.

The unfamiliar environment, the pure white hue, the simple Scandinavian decor, the bedside infusion apparatus with the bottle being attached to his arm, feeding an IV into his body. A few thin metal wires were attached to his chest, connected to a heart rate monitor on the side.

Luther sat up and unplugged the cable from his chest, and at once, the monitor on the side emitted a "drip" alarm.

Jacqueline wiped her tears and choked back a sob, "A week ago, you were in a car accident. You were driving alone to Clarenworth at night, I heard, to sign a new real estate partnership agreement. You had an accident on the outskirts of Clarenworth and crashed your car into a large tree on the side of the road. You were initially taken to Clarenworth Central Hospital, where you were taken out of critical condition two days later, but you did not wake up, so Casey arranged for an ambulance to take you back to St. Maria Hospital for further treatment."

"The car accident ..." Luther held his forehead, he did not remember that at all, and why he had to go to Clarenworth? What new real estate partnership agreement? Did he not sign the Clarenworth agreement long ago? He didn't have the slightest recollection.

Damn, how many things did he forget.

He picked up his glass of water and drained it in one gulp.

Putting down the glass of water, he ordered in a gruff voice, "Hurry up and call grandma and tell her I'm awake. I've been in a coma for a week and she must be worried. Also, have Aaron and Casey come over."

Just after he finished, he saw Jacqueline frozen in place with a stunned look on her face, her lips closed in surprise.

"What?" He raised an eyebrow.

"I remember. You saved my life, you were a student at the University of Conard." Luther looked over at Charlotte, narrowing his eyes as he surveyed her. She looked actually pretty charming in her plain dress without any makeup.

He remembered that the night he was attacked, he was forced to jump into the Han River. Because the effect of the drug he became unconscious and sank into the water. Charlotte rescued him from the Han River and sacrificed her virginity for him. He promised that he would be responsible for her.

Charlotte's watery eyes turned slightly, excitedly stepped forward, her trembling hands holding Luther's arm, "Luther, you remember me, great, you are in a coma these days. I couldn't eat, I couldn't sleep, I was so worried that I was going crazy."

At the touch of her skin, Luther shrugged her off almost instantly.

Charlotte was lifted by his force and stumbled backwards a few steps, falling right into Shelly.

Shelly rushed to hold Charlotte and said with concern, "Are you okay?"

Luther frowned. He didn't know what was wrong with him. He didn't mean to push her away, but it was like his body reacted instinctively and couldn't stand her touch.

Charlotte stood aside and watched them with a smile.

She repeatedly stole a glance at Luther and saw that he seemed to forget everything, and her heart was secretly excited.

"By the way, I made my own steamed dumplings today and brought them with me, they're in the doctor's office, they should still be hot, I'll go get them for you." Charlotte said.

"Yes. Charlotte comes to see you every day and brings her own homemade snacks each time. She is so worried about you." Shelly said affectionately as she took Charlotte's arm on the side.

"I told her to stay home and take good care of herself when she's pregnant and she should not run around every day. She's carrying the flesh and blood of the Warner family." Shelly reached out and caressed Charlotte's belly, "Brother, you probably don't remember either. She's pregnant with your baby, a boy."

"Pregnant?" Luther wrinkled his brow, finding it unbelievable.

Was Charlotte pregnant, by chance, that night? Was he and Charlotte already that close? He always felt something strange, and couldn't put his finger on it.

Charlotte blushing lowered her head and elbowed Shelly, "Luther just woke up, don't talk about that. I'll go get you a snack."

He couldn't take it for a moment, and his body reacted honestly, resisting the intimacy with Charlotte. Nor did he want to eat what

A week ago, in the evening, Seaview's Restaurant.

Starless and moonless, the dull and almost suffocating darkness of the night enveloped the whole place. The moisture of the night spread everywhere, forming an eerie atmosphere.

At the end of the boulevard, Luther was attacked by Ricky and struck from the back of his neck, and fell unconscious on the ground.

Charlotte was standing not far behind Luther; she was frightened by the sudden incident. She did not have time to make a sound, and her mouth had been covered tightly by a giant palm, and she could only make a "woo" sound.

"Don't make a sound, it's me." Ricky leaned close to Charlotte's ear and whispered, "Or people may notice."

Charlotte smiled, and nodded repeatedly. It was Ricky, and she felt much relieved.

The Warner family was so powerful that even though he was in a coma, they could not do anything to him.

However, once Luther woke up from the coma, the situation would only get even worse.

Ricky thought and thought again and suggested, "I've got a solution, but it is somewhat risky."

"What's the solution?" Charlotte sobbed as she wiped her tears.

"The military has recently developed a new drug that is still in the trial stage. It can make you lose your short-term memory and never regain it. The new drug was intended to be used on soldiers who surrendered during the war for their rehabilitation. I happen to have this new drug." Ricky said calmly.

"Loss of short-term memory ... how short exactly?" Charlotte was surprised inside her heart, stopped crying, raised her eyes and asked.

Luther was sitting on the couch in the VIP room, with Aaron and Casey standing in front of him.

Casey handed over a detailed schedule and recent work reports and said respectfully, "Mr. Warner, you did drive to Clarenworth alone the night of your accident, and I arrived in Clarenworth in the afternoon first, and you said you had something to do and would drove yourself there in the evening."

"Me? Why do I have to drive alone at night by myself?" Luther couldn't recall, and it didn't make sense.

"Yes, Mr. Warner, because that night you booked the entire Seaview's Restaurant for dinner with Miss Meyer. You drove alone to Clarenworth afterwards and were later involved in a car accident near the outskirts of town." Aaron recounted.

"Driverless technology, what's that all about again? I can't remember a thing at all." Luther raised an eyebrow, "The board actually voted yes unanimously? And how is Joyce's name on the board of directors list?"

Casey and Aaron looked at each other.

Boss still remembered Joyce, but did not remember everything that happened with Joyce?

Aaron couldn't help but feel worried for Joyce. The already chaotic situation, he was afraid, would only become even more chaotic.

"Mr. Warner, the matter is too long to explain for a while." Aaron scratched his head and said back.

"Then take long story short!" Luther looked unhappy and had a bad tone.

Joyce?

Luther had a momentary lapse of concentration when he saw Joyce.

His memory of Joyce was still all about his fake marriage to her, Justin's disappearance from St. Maria Hospital, and Joyce's drunken slap in his face when she returned to the Warner residence.

What happened after that, he could not remember at all.

Just now he cursorily looked through the news. The more he looked, the more shocked he was.

Joyce was awarded the "Khebury Shining Star" for her bravery in saving a life; his grandmother died unexpectedly, the truth unknown, and before she died, she rewrote her will and said that half of her shares should be inherited by Joyce; Joyce was imprisoned on suspicion of murder, but was later released after proving her innocence; Joyce was kidnapped and perhaps killed; Joyce's pregnancy was revealed in public at a party to celebrate her becoming a director, and the father of the child was the Henderson family's son Justin ...

All these were all beyond his imagination.
