Chapter 591

The second precinct.

Joyce came to the second precinct again today. She did not expect that Karl's jurisdiction was actually quite large, and it covered even the overpass. It took her a whole hour of cab drive to get there from R&S.

Just now on the overpass, the passersby who witnessed the incident called the police for her.

In about five minutes, the police arrived at the scene and the man in black who had fainted on the ground had been taken away. In the police car, the man in black woke up, so the police did not take him to the hospital, but directly to the police station.

Joyce called to inform Juanita that she was in a cab and would go to the second precinct directly.

As Joyce identified Shelly as a suspect on the spot, the police brought Shelly back to the police station for investigation as well.

Now, Joyce, Shelly, Juanita, and the man in black were all sitting in the lobby of the police headquarters, and the man in black was held by a police officer. In addition, there were several onlookers at the time. The originally spacious lobby of the police headquarters instantly became crowded.

Chapter 592

Karl's call went through and he said only one sentence.

"Luther, your sister is now in my police station, come over here."

After saying that, he hung up the phone.

Shelly was dumbfounded that this little cop could have her brother's phone number and was calling her brother to come over. So he wasn't calling his boss for instructions.

Oh God, the last thing she wanted was for Luther to know about this! It's over, it's over!

"Why did you call my brother? Can't I handle my own business myself? Why did you have to call him!" Shelly screamed out of control.

"I heard you mention your brother repeatedly and I figured you must need him badly, so I called for you." Karl shrugged, "Here's my ID, and you should remember it. If you have any complaints, you will need it."

"You are so..." Shelly gasped, unable to speak.

"I'm sorry, I have business to attend to, so excuse me."

Shelly heard the movement, turned her head, saw that it was Luther, and shut up immediately.

Not knowing if Luther had heard what she had just said, she hurriedly sat back in her seat. She pretended she had just seen Luther, and called out affectionately, "Brother, what brings you here?"

"Officer, what's going on?" Luther asked Victor directly as he walked up quickly.

Victor had dealt with Luther several times when he was working on the Stephanie case and the Joyce kidnapping case, so he naturally knew him.

He hurriedly and respectfully said, "Mr. Warner, it just so happens that we are just now starting to ask about what happened, so you can listen along."

Luther froze slightly – the young officer in front of him knew him.

Although he could not remember anything about him, perhaps they knew each other before he lost his memory.

He then looked around and his eyes fell on Joyce. Juanita was there and there were a group of people he didn't know.

What's going on? It's Joyce again.

At this point, Victor came up to Jimmy and asked, "We have got witnesses, and the statement of the lady now. Let me ask you, why did you push this lady from behind, did you want her to fall down the steps?"

Jimmy blurted out, "They were all just mistaken. How is it possible? I just accidentally bumped into her, and when I stumbled and almost tripped over, I just unintentionally pushed her a bit."

"Then why are you running?" Victor asked again.

"I didn't run. I suddenly remembered I had something to do and turned around to go back."

Jimmy was also well aware of their procedure, so he simply would never admit, "Why don't you get the surveillance."

"You!" Victor suddenly had no idea what to do in front of a scoundrel.

It was exactly because he knew that there was no surveillance on the overpass that Jimmy dared to be so arrogant.

Shelly raised her voice and replied.

"There are only restaurants around the place." Karl reminded.

"I was tired and I was there to find a restaurant for my dinner."

Shelly said emphatically, "I was really just passing by. What? They're allowed to use that overpass and not me?"

"You really don't know him?" Karl pointed at Jimmy.

"I don't know him. Who am I to know him?!" Shelly raised her voice again, "Brother, look at him! He's deliberately trying to frame me. You must help me and complain to his boss!"

At that moment, she finally remembered that Karl was the officer who took over her grandmother's case before. No wonder he knew Luther and also knew Joyce and helped Joyce.

"Oh, it looks like Miss Warner has a poor memory. She doesn't even remember the car she just rode in and even the driver she just met."

Karl let out a low laugh.

"Ah, really? I don't know. I sit in the rear row every time and never look at the front. Isn't it normal to not see what the driver looks like? So who am I to know Jimmy."

Shelly was eager to defend herself and try to dismiss any connection with the driver.

"Did I mention that the driver was Jimmy?" Karl's stern gaze was fixed on Shelly.

"..."

Shelly was confused on the spot and knew she was being set up by Karl.

Joyce gave a sarcastic laugh from the sidelines.

It was just funny to see how naive Shelly had been. How could ordinary people be a match for Karl, the master of interrogation?

Joyce just thought Shelly hated her and wanted to teach her a lesson.

She never thought Shelly would try to cause her to miscarry.

Luther only thought that Shelly didn't like Joyce, and she wanted to get revenge for all the previous problems they had.

He never thought that his sister, who usually looked so kind, would have such a vicious side.

Juanita only thought that Shelly was relentless and bossy.

But she didn't think that Shelly could do something against the laws.

Karl, however, was the calmest one among them. He had seen enough the darkest side of human nature, and what Shelly did was just too common for him.

Moreover, from the time he learned about the truth from Jimmy, he already guessed Shelly's purpose.

Before Jimmy confessed, he just left for a moment. Actually he went and quickly check Shelly's whereabouts.

However, the person in front of him now was Karl.

As far as he knew, with Karl's powerful political background, nobody could help him this time.

More importantly, the person Shelly wanted to hurt was Joyce.

This was something that made him most uncomfortable with.

Just when he thought that Joyce may have been hurt at that time.

His heart seemed to be pressed with a boulder, and he felt depressingly breathless.

And, for some reason, his heart inexplicably ached at the thought of Joyce's near miscarriage.

Why did he feel so heartbroken when it was clearly not his child?

He could not understand.

"Come here."

He reached out, trying to pull Joyce to himself. Perhaps out of guilt, perhaps out of a desire to protect her.

At one point, Shelly sold her designs to the Ballard Group.

She framed her and tried to drive her out of the group.

At that time, though, she finally proved her own innocence.

However, at that time, Luther only let Shelly leave the project, and did not make any other arrangements. He did not even mention such a thing in the internal briefing of the R&S Group.

Joyce knew that it was Casey who had suggested he dealt with the matter in such a way and that was just to protect the reputation of the R&S Group. She understood it and did not pursue the matter any further.

Luther had amnesia and couldn't remember the incident, but Casey should have reported it to him.

This time was different, however. Shelly had hit her bottom line by trying to cause her to miscarry.

She would not care that much if it was just her reputation, but she would never give in when it came to her child.

Just when did his sister become so ruthless, spiteful, and brutal? He could hardly recognize her already.

A crisp sound resounded through the entire negotiation room.

He did not hit lightly, and five bright red marks immediately showed up on Shelly's otherwise snow-white cheeks. It looked shocking.

"You hit me again!" Shelly shouted incredulously, and she finally could not hold back the tears that had been in her eyes long ago. Strings of beads flew out from the corners of her eyes.

Joyce, who was held by Luther now, was also shocked that she forgot to struggle.

"Again? Did I do that to you before?" Luther eyes narrowed. As far as he could remember, he had never slapped his sister. Although Shelly was mean and capricious, she was not bad in nature.

From childhood to adulthood, he had always doted on her.

"I ..." Shelly bit her lower lip, but did not say anything more than that for fear of saying something wrong.

After Luther lost his memory, she originally thought they could be just the way they were in the past as brother and sister.

How could she had expected that in just ten days, Joyce seemed to be winning again.
