Chapter 611

Meanwhile, at the military hospital.

Ricky came to Charlotte's room.

Charlotte had just laid down after lunch, ready for a nap, and when she heard the movement of Ricky coming in, she hurriedly sat up.

"Didn't we agree that we would try not to see each other during the day? What if Shelly or Jacqueline see us? What's wrong?" She asked urgently, knowing that Ricky had always known better than to do such a thing and that something was definitely wrong.

"Something did come up, Miss Meyer. Take it easy." Ricky locked the door behind him, "Don't worry, Shelly and Jacqueline won't be here for a few days."

"Yeah, right." Ricky nodded, "Joyce has been making it too tricky for us for a long time with Karl on her side. Otherwise, I would have taken care of her a long time ago."

Ricky also hated Joyce so much. She shot him in the arm, which affected his accuracy in shooting.

He would definitely have to make her pay for it.

" St. Maria Hospital is the closest hospital from the Second Precinct, was Joyce taken there last night?" Charlotte asked again.

"That's right." Ricky replied.

"I know someone at St. Maria Hospital, let me ask." Charlotte said, took out her phone, and looked through her contacts. Finally, she found a phone number, and dialed it.

It was almost evening when Justin arrived at St. Maria Hospital.

Joyce reclined on the bench next to the bed, looking out at the sky gradually dyed red by the sunset, and the afterglow was spilled all over the ground, as if everything was coated with a dreamy layer of gold.

She was now by the window. Her black hair hanged like a curtain of satin, and she seemed to be immersed in the haze. What a beautiful scene.

Justin slowly approached. He did not say a word so that he would not break this beautiful and tranquil scene. He stood there for a while, until the haze faded and the dull darkness enveloped the surrounding.

Joyce realized that there was someone around her.

She turned around and froze when she saw it was Justin.

"Justin, how long have you been here? Just standing all this time?" She asked, reaching over and turning on the light.

She just wanted to take a rest here quietly...

"Joyce, I've been very free lately, and you're in the hospital, so I can spend more time with you." Justin said solicitously.

"Justin, I just want to take advantage of the quiet moments when no one is bothering me to finish the final design." She pointed her finger at the computer as well as the electronic drawing board, "I will finish it by next Friday. This is my last job at the R&S Group."

Justin looked back. Just now he also noticed all the office stuff in the ward. The ward had become a small office.

"Oh." He didn't say anything more; Joyce had said she would leave the R&S Group after her marriage to

"So, you don't need to come in the next few days. Call me if you need anything, okay?" Joyce requested,
"Otherwise, I just can't focus on my work with people come and go every day."

"Joyce ..."

Justin dwelt on it for a moment, but finally agreed, "Okay. But you must return my message in time."

The discharge procedure was simple, and the bill for the VIP ward would be directly sent to the R&S Group headquarters.

Once Joyce filled out the form, she could just leave.

Aaron had arrived at the hospital. In two separate trips, he carried all the computers and drawing boards from her ward to the car, and then returned to the ward.

Joyce was also done with her packing.

"Joyce, are you going home to rest or going to the R&S Group?" asked Aaron solicitously. He and Joyce got along naturally and spoke casually in Luther's absence.

"I'm going back to the headquarters." Joyce had very few things, just a handbag.

"You're going back with me in my car then." Aaron took what Joyce was holding.

"Good." Joyce didn't refuse.

She hesitated for a moment and dialed his number directly.
The "Doo, Doo, Doo—" sound went on and on and she almost thought that the call was going to end when he finally picked up his phone.
"Something wrong?" His voice was calm and did not convey much of his emotion.
"It's Friday." Joyce didn't want to be too straightforward this time.
"So what?"
"What day is it? You don't remember?" Joyce asked in surprise.
"Didn't I arrange for Aaron to pick you up after you were discharged from the hospital? I'm sorry I had some business and couldn't make it over. What other questions do you have? I'm in a meeting, I'll call you back later." Luther answered as if Joyce was calling to question him about why he hadn't picked her

"What the hell does he mean?" Joyce wondered.

"Sorry, I don't understand it either. I've been with boss for many years and still can't figure out the vast majority of his decisions." Aaron was willing to say a few sincere words to Joyce, "Besides, I can't ask much about Boss' affairs."

"Hmm. I know. He is eccentric and has a changeable temperament. It must have been quite a tough job all these years to follow him around." Joyce coldly pouted her lips. People always said that women were all too changeable and fickle, but they would think otherwise if they met Luther!

"Uh..." Aaron was speechless. That's not what he actually meant.

Luther treated him well, but usually his ideas were too sophisticated for him to understand.

In her heart, there was an inexplicable sourness that pervaded everywhere, soaking every nerve.

Walking into the elevator alone, she pressed the button for the 12th floor.

Dazedly looking at the numbers going up on the display, she just felt her mind dizzy and didn't know what to think.

Suddenly, she tossed her head hard. Now that she had made all the preparations, she could only go forward.

Everything would come to an end tomorrow.

Right now, there was no use thinking about it.

Noon.

Luther was in Clarenworth, finishing up the project's wrap-up meeting, having lunch with the project director, and making arrangements for follow-ups. When it was all over, he set out for his journey back to Khebury.

Casey drove and Luther sat in the rear seat. Soon, the Bentley was on the highway.

"The Clarenworth property project was not very profitable overall, but the price we paid for this is not small. President, should we stop working with them in the future?" Casey said with a little bit of resentment.

In his opinion, Clarenworth's project was full of surprises and stumbles. Most importantly, the president was also involved in a car accident on his way to Clarenworth because of the project, and lost his memory. Luckily, the president's life was not in danger.

The gains were few, and the price paid was heavy.

Moreover, in his opinion, only Joyce could be worthy of the president and become the mistress of this huge business empire.

He always felt that the president was extremely far-sighted in terms of business investment. But in terms of feelings, it seemed ... very lacking ...

However, he would still work for what the president wished.

Casey just had to step on the gas and go over the speed limit.

Meanwhile, after Joyce had a pleasant lunch with her colleagues, she first moved her luggage back to Eden Apartment and then arrived at the court at two thirty sharp.

She made several appointments, for 3:00, 3:15, 3:30, and even 4:00 in advance, just in case Luther would be late.

After waiting for a few moments, Aaron arrived first.

After all, he had Luther's ID.

Aaron handed Luther's ID to Joyce and said, "Joyce, you take it first. I'll go downstairs to the parking lot and wait there." Saying that, he hurriedly turned around and left. In fact, he didn't want to witness the scene of Boss and Joyce's divorce and intentionally walked away. At the thought of their separation, even he, a bystander, felt helpless and sour in his heart.
