Chapter 661

"Bang-Bang!" Sparks shot out from the pistol, and the faint smell of smoke filled the air.

"Screech—" They then heard a violent and sharp braking sound not far away.

The Hummer Ricky was driving suddenly ran sideways and hit the guardrail head-on.

To their surprise, however, although Ricky's car stopped, with his extraordinary strength and fast reaction, he just stopped the car steadily. If it were anyone else, a sudden blowout at such a high speed would most certainly lead to a rollover due to the imbalance, but nothing like that happened this time.

Joyce wanted to fire two more shots and directly inflated all the four tires in the front, because the Hummer he drove had two tires on each side in the front. Unfortunately, Karl was afraid that Ricky might have a counterattack, because, after all, their vehicle also entered Ricky's range. Just now Ricky simply had no time to react. Now he might shoot them at any moment, and his bullets would shoot straight at them without any barriers. In this way, Joyce would be in danger.

"We should leave." Karl whispered, then stepped on the gas pedal and sped off.

All of a sudden, they were too far away for her to shoot again.

Joyce just had to stop. She retrieved the gun and placed it on the center console.

Immediately after, she suddenly pushed him heavily and directly in front of the pipe.

The wild wind whipped through, lifting her long hair, and her clear voice was sent along by the wind word by word.

"Karl, you must stay alive. Otherwise, I won't forgive you even after I am dead!"

With that, she turned around and darted away towards the car.

She got straight into the driver's seat and stepped on the gas pedal without hesitation. The car sped ahead like an arrow off the string.

"Joyce! Joyce!"

Karl completely panicked. He did not even notice that Joyce had lied to him and she never planned to hide at all. She left the pistol in the car, in fact, just to make him believe that she would do as he planned.

Luther left the ceremony midway through, and his cell phone had been bombarded by thousands of messages and calls already.

Jacqueline called him numerous times and he didn't even want to answer her call. He simply felt bored and annoyed.

All he wanted to do was find Joyce as soon as possible.

What did Joyce mean by those words before she left?

"Do you really think that the person who saved you was Charlotte?"

The words echoed over and over again in his mind.

As he was talking, Officer Franklin's cell phone suddenly rang.

"Mr. Gregory is on the phone." Franklin suddenly shouted excitedly.

He immediately pick up the phone.

The person who called, however, was not Karl, but Joyce.

"Franklin, Karl is now at the end of the 7th Avenue. There are some large abandoned concrete pipes in the wilderness, and he is now hiding in the thickest one. Take someone to rescue him immediately! He's been shot. Be quick!"

Joyce finished in one breath and hung up the phone directly.

"Hello? Hello? Hello?" Franklin shouted into the phone several times, but all he got was the "Beep-beep-beep-beep" sound.

The other officers immediately gathered around, "What did Karl say?"

As Luther stood in the Second Precinct lobby, everything around him seemed to become so unreal.

Why would he feel he had been through the same thing in the past?

Had he experienced the same tense atmosphere before? Why would he have such a panicky feeling now? His thoughts, breathing, and heartbeat were disorganized and out of control.

After making arrangements properly for the internal affairs of the police department, Officer Franklin walked into the lobby and saw Luther was still there.

He walked up and said, "Mr. Warner, the SWAT team that had been sent out to rescue Victor just now came back, and they reported that before Victor fell into a coma, he told them that the person who was after him was Ricky. Judging from the residual traces at the scene, they were pretty sure he was carrying a heavy gun. There may be someone else backing him up, and the person who has sabotaged the police system should also be him!"

"Ricky?!" Luther almost thought he heard it wrong, "Ricky? The lieutenant following Charlotte?"

The entire Second Precinct was in a state of emergency and no one was allowed to enter or leave the building. All operations were suspended today, and emergency cases are transferred to other police stations.

Luther had no idea what's going on inside.

He was anxious and unable to calm himself down. He kept wandering back and forth. His chest was filled with a mass of hot air. Such a wait was too painful, and he felt so nervous, worried and annoyed.

When Aaron arrived at the Second Precinct, he saw Luther in such a disheveled state.

"Mr. Warner, what's the emergency you're calling me for?" Aaron rushed forward to ask. Just now Luther called him and asked him to rush over, but he did not say what he would need him to do exactly. He had wondered, Wasn't today Boss' engagement? The ceremony should last until the dinner. How come Boss was at the Second Precinct just afternoon?

"Aaron, Joyce is in danger. I'll brief to you about it."

Luther explained something quickly to Aaron, "We'll stand guard here and follow immediately if a police car comes out to the rescue."

"Wait, Boss," Aaron, who was equally worried about Joyce after he knew what was going on, thought of something important.

"Mr. Warner, let's drive now and get in the direction of Joyce as soon as possible. Do you want to notify the police department so we can go out together? The more people, the safer, after all." Aaron said seriously.

"No, look, their communication system is back up." Luther reached out and pointed to the blue lights that lit up in the police station, and many SWAT team members ran for the door, fully loaded and ready to go.

"Get in the car and tell the helicopter to get in position." Luther made a quick decision.

"Good." Aaron sped the car out.

On the road, Luther put on his seatbelt while analyzing, "With the current distance, no matter how fast the police can be, they simply get to her within an hour."

"The most important thing is, I am worried that Joyce is driving the wrong way. What if she drives the car to the cliff? There is no way to go, and those thugs are still chasing her. What should we do? The situation is so critical and I must find her within half an hour. Right now only the helicopter can do it."

"Yes, Boss. You are so right in your analysis, and I didn't think of it."

On the other hand, Joyce drove all the way to the top.

The car had no windshield, and the whistling cold wind poured straight in, scraping her cheeks numb, and the loud noise generated caused her eardrums to ache.

She noticed that there were vehicles coming up behind her, and there were more than one of them.

It appeared that Ricky's men had rejoined him and were now accelerating after her.

Now she had both Karl's phone and her phone in the car and she thought Ricky must have used the location tracking system to find her so quickly. However, Ricky must not have imagined that there was already a person missing from the car.

Now that they had all been following behind her, she knew in her heart that Karl was safe.

Luther sat anxiously in the helicopter, wearing a special noise-cancelling headset that not only provided sound insulation but also kept his voice normal when he was on the phone.

Once on the helicopter, he tried to find Joyce's cell phone with the real-time satellite locating system and connected his phone to the helicopter's center console using Bluetooth.

Soon, a popping red dot was displayed on the center console, indicating the current location of Joyce.

And the helicopter had come with a navigation system that could help him quickly find the best path based on wind direction, airflow and other factors.

The pilot followed the route from the navigation system, adjusted the direction and flew all the way to Joyce.

With the red dot on the center console entering an off-ramp, Luther let out a low curse. Hell, Joyce was still heading for the cliff.

He knew that although Joyce could drive, she didn't drive much and was not very familiar with the roads.

Right now, he could do nothing but get there as soon as possible.

Chapter 670

His brain felt even more dazed and dull than before.

Was it possible for him to use five million dollars worth of diamonds just for a set of jewelry for Joyce?

Previously, whether it was for their engagement or for their future wedding with Charlotte, he had never done anything about jewelry because he could not possibly consider such things.

What did it say about him that he ordered a whole set of jewelry, not for his fiancée, but for Joyce, and worth five hundred million dollars? Of course, he couldn't have customized any jewelry for Charlotte.

At this moment, he was in complete confusion.

Before he lost his memory, he had done so many incomprehensible things.

He remembered that right after the car accident, he found a "Wifey" from his contact, he dialed the number and it was Joyce who answered the call.

At that time, he was very angry and felt that Joyce must have tampered with his phone, and afterwards, he deleted all communication records about her directly and forgot about it.

Then he remembered the scene of their entwined bodies in his office, and he thought to himself that he could never possibly do such a thing in the office. He believed that Joyce had seduced him, and even this morning, he lost control of himself and angrily forced himself on her, and even at this moment, when he thought about the sorrow in her eyes, he could not help but feel a throb in his heart.
