Chapter 791

It had been four years.

He had changed a lot.

He was now wearing a black suit, and the former warm smile could no longer be found on his handsome face, which was now cold and indifferent. He actually seemed to be covered with melancholy all over.

However, since just now, Justin seemed to have been quite distracted and had never said anything.

After that, his face suddenly turned pale, and his long fingers pressed against his chest. It seemed that he could hardly breathe.

"Mr. Henderson, how are you?" Joyce stepped forward and asked worriedly.

It had been four years and she heard that in addition to the financing and trading company of his own, Justin had completely taken over the Henderson family bank.

So when she met him just now, she, like everyone else, addressed him as "Mr. Henderson".

Justin leaned back, "I'm fine, Miss Zora. Let's get down to our business."

She finally gripped the teacup firmly in her hand so as not to lose her manners.

Kane looked at Joyce and then at Justin with amazement. The offer was definitely a good deal. With Justin's support, JK Intelligence would be able to expand immediately. There were definitely losses. After all, it was always good to have a company as big as R&S behind their back. Working with R&S could save them a lot of trouble and brought them a lot of revenue.

Overall, Justin's fifty-million offer was certainly more tempting.

But never selling technology to the R&S Group? Did Justin have some problems with R&S?

Just like Kane, Joyce thought about the same possibility immediately as well.

Complicated emotions could be seen in Joyce's eyes as she looked at Justin. Was he taking revenge on Luther? Indeed, four years ago, she had seen media reports about how the Henderson family bank terminated all cooperation with the R&S Group and the two turned into a feud.

But she thought that nearly four years had passed and time would smooth everything out.

Chapter 793

After a few steps, he suddenly turned his head again.

His words were freezing cold, "I hope you two consider the matter carefully. If you accept the offer of R&S Group, it would be equal to offending the entire financial world. Not only the Henderson family bank, it would be quite unlikely for you to get support from other institutions. Think it over and get back to me."

After saying that, Justin left without looking back.

Joyce looked at his back in dismay, and could not get back to her senses for a long time.

"Sister. Was it a threat? Was he threatening us?" Kane opened his eyes wide and could not believe what he just heard, "Why? Not accepting his terms means we won't get a single penny in loans from any financial institutions? Does he have to do that? That's killing us! Simply every company needs financing, and money equals blood."

"Ahem, of course, that does not include R&S, and they don't need to raise a penny from them. But not us? We can't rely on our own liquidity. Although we have made money in the past two years, but that's certainly not enough." Kane said and his eyebrows furrowed, "Sister, he is using the power to give you pressure."

There were complicated emotions in Joyce's eyes.

But, she had to say it.

If there was no possibility between them, it should be made clear from the beginning, otherwise she would only make the same mistake as she did with Justin, and she had a great responsibility for the terrible situation they were having now.

She thought of Karl. She didn't want to be a burden to Karl so she had made it very clear with him. After she woke up from the coma, she also had thought of contacting Karl and Juanita, both of whom were her close friends. But eventually she thought better of it.

Without her, the two of them should be able to get together.

Why should she get involved again?

And, this time, her return to the Capital was actually quite dangerous. She didn't want anyone to get into danger because of her. Karl was shot for her and almost died. If she hadn't left him behind, he would have long died. When she thought about it, she still felt guilty in her heart.

What was past was past.

Wouldn't it be nice to just let them all think that she was dead and everyone could start over?

It was Luther's voice.

He looked familiar, as if he had met him somewhere.

Luther narrowed his eyes and kept thinking where he could have seen this man.

Suddenly, he thought of Casey had said. When he was at the airport, he saw the young son of the Roberts family. What's his name again?

"Miss Knowles, won't you introduce me? And this is?" Luther asked with an elegant gesture, pointing to Kane.

Kane looked at Luther, who was sitting in front of him, and for some reason, alarm bells went off in his mind.

He knew Luther, although he was always studying abroad and only returned to Pascaylia once every two or three years. He did not know much about the people and events in Pascaylia but he knew Luther. He had seen him on the cover of a financial magazine.

However, this was the first time that he had seen him in person.

Kane took a deep breath and subconsciously straightened his collar. Probably out of his instinct of a man, he did not want to look inferior to the man in front of him.

Joyce looked at Kane and frowned slightly.

She suddenly laughed, "Oh. People are simply so low-profile these days. I have got all the heirs around me, as it turns out."

Kane was a little embarrassed. He didn't expect to be exposed in such a way, "Sister. I'm sorry. I'll explain to you later, okay?"

Joyce nodded her head. She wouldn't really blame him, and she was just a little surprised.

In fact, it had not been the first time she had experienced such a thing. Back then she thought Karl was nothing but an ordinary detective, but as it turned out, he was the prince of the legal world.

It was, however, between the two of them and there was no need to settle it in front of Luther.

"Since Mr. Roberts is also here, it seems that we can talk about the promotion part of R&S's cooperation with Roberts Media now?"

"No, Mr. Warner, we can talk about it some other time. I suddenly got something to do, and I'll leave now." Kane stood up and nodded to Luther.

He then exchanged glances with Joyce again.

With that, she turned away and walked into the middle of the hall.

She hadn't eaten anything since she came to the party, and she decided to fill up her stomach first.

At that moment, her phone rang and she received a text message.

She took her phone out and it was from Kane.

"Anderson is happy and we have left the venue already. By the way, Sister, I just saw Mr. Henderson driving away too."

Joyce put away her phone and it turned out that Justin had come to the dinner party specifically for her.

Now that Justin was gone, she didn't have to worry about running into him again. After all, Luther was still at the dinner and it would be quite embarrassed for her. Fortunately, the two of them did not meet tonight. Otherwise, there would definitely be a war between them and she could imagine that already.

Today, Justin gave her a problem.

What to do next and how could she possibly solve it, she had no idea yet.

She didn't want to offend Justin, and she didn't want the relationship between Luther and Justin to get even worse because of this incident.

"Aaaah! Oh my God, blood!" The people around him were also shocked and shouted.

The girl was so shocked that her eyes were wide open. She just could not believe her eyes. The younger Mr. Walsh's hand was hit by a fork. Was someone helping her out?

The girl hurriedly got up from the ground and hid far away. She was shivering with fear, and she just wanted to leave the party immediately.

The younger Mr. Walsh gripped his wrist. He was so afraid that his legs went limp and he fell directly to the ground.

"Blood! Blood! Ah! Why is my right hand so numb? God, I can't lose my hand!" He grunted.

The older Mr. Walsh rushed over from the side at this time. He held his brother's shoulders and asked, "What's wrong? What happened? What's wrong with your hand?"

He turned his head to look around and bellowed, "Who did this? Who did this? Why are you hiding after you did such a thing?"

"Damn it! Turn off the music!!!" The older Mr. Walsh yelled hysterically.

"It doesn't matter. It's just that if Miss Knowles loves beef, I know a place in the Capital that is quite famous." Luther smiled, "Why don't we give it a try tomorrow."

"Thanks, but no." Joyce grimaced.

He just would never give up every single opportunity, right? What a cheeky man.

"Strange, Miss Knowles, why is there no fork on your plate? How inconvenient it must be to eat like that." Luther kindly pointed it out, and then, he walked to the dining table next to her, took a fork and put it on her plate.

"Thanks. I left it on the dining table earlier. It doesn't matter, and I'll just use a spoon."

Joyce glanced at him faintly, and she felt a bit worried.

Did he find something? Or did he see her throw her fork and hit the younger Mr. Walsh in the back of his hand?

By this time, the ambulance had arrived.

Although the younger Mr. Walsh's leg was not injured, he was so scared that he could hardly walk and they had to carry him into the ambulance on a stretcher.

After the younger Mr. Walsh was carried away, the older Mr. Walsh scanned the hall with irritation. There was no way something like this could have happened for no reason.

When he saw Joyce was alone not far away, his face suddenly darkened.

As if there was a flame in his chest, he rushed directly to Joyce with quick steps.

After what happened the last time they met, he did not dare to make a move against her easily. He sternly questioned, "Ms. Knowles, what just happened to my brother, did you do it?"

Joyce put down the plate and dessert in her hands.

She snickered as she raised her eyebrows, "Mr. Walsh, you have to have evidence to say something like that. I don't know what happened just now, and Mr. Walsh is blaming it all on me? It's too much."
