

Sweet love 901

Chapter 901

Luther was on the sidelines and had heard part of the conversation.

At this moment, his face looked like the last dull dark clouds before the storm and it seemed that he was about to say something.

He tried very hard to hold back his anger and did not storm out. After all, Anderson was home and he did not want to scare the child.

"Did Otis kill Mr. Walsh?" he asked.

"Hmm."

Joyce put her phone down and returned, "At seven, Otis called me and told me to go to Hotel Dragon and to read the morning news. That's why I left in a hurry."

She didn't mention that Mr. Walsh died in the exact same way as Stephanie, which would have revealed her identity.

"Mr. Walsh tried to kill you?" He asked again, "So Otis killed him before he could ever come for you?"

"Maybe, who knows if it is true." Joyce would love to pull back her hand, but it is held tightly by him, and he didn't seem to be willing to let go.

How would the once unbeatable Luther so easily give in?

In front of her, he seemed to be trying desperately to restrain his emotions.

She's not stupid, and she could see that.

It had been four years and he had become a completely different person.

If he were still what he used to be, he would definitely force her.

She rubbed her long hair in annoyance.

Looking at the table above, she noticed the breakfast he made for Anderson.

Suddenly, she felt sorry in her heart.

Just now she seemed to be a bit too much.

She left the house in a hurry, and it was Luther who had been taking care of Anderson at home.

At that moment, Anderson slid off the top of the couch.

He was never involved in the quarrels between adults.

Karl caught a glimpse of her and he stood up, pulling the seat for her.

Juanita sat down, "I'm sorry I'm late. Something came up and I need to deal with it."

"It's okay. In the past it has always been you waiting for me." Karl said softly. Yes, for the past four long years, he knew that she had been waiting for him, and he had made her wait too long.

Juanita looked up and smiled awkwardly.

It had been two months again, and she had cut her hair short, and she looked lively and cute.

Her delicate features and dark pupils were shining with a crystal light.

Karl had a close look at her, and she looked a little like the way she was in the past.

"Wow, you get so much delicious food. I'll get fat for this dinner."

Juanita smiled, revealing two sweet dimples.

"It's okay. You've got thinner again, and you should eat more."

Inside the window, time seemed to have stopped for this beautiful picture, and the two of them remained motionless.

Karl gently raised his hand and wiped away the teardrops from the corner of her eyes.

"I'm sorry to have put you through this."

He said gently.

Even more tears brimmed over from her eyes.

At the moment, she was not at all like the usual excited, cute Juanita.

Hurrying to wipe her tears, she sniffled, "I'm sorry. I lost my manners."

"By the way, you haven't told me about Joyce. It's great that she's still alive. Just, why didn't she tell me, and she didn't come to me? I have been worried for her for so long." Juanita puckered up her lips in a disgruntled manner.

Joyce was certainly not familiar with the Capital, so it would be more appropriate for them to go find her.

Joyce looked around, "I happened to be downtown, and I saw that there was a café. It's called freese and it looks big."

"I know the place. You can go first and ask for a large box. We are not far away and will be there immediately." Karl said.

"Good." Joyce answered and then hung up.

She then took Anderson to freese and asked for the largest box.

Anderson was sitting on the couch, playing his game.

Joyce ordered him a juice and three more cappuccinos and waited quietly.

About half an hour later.

A crisp knock sounded on the door of the box.

Left and right, up and down ... She finally gave it a hard squeeze.
"Wow, awesome high tech! Is it really a mask? Sure it's not plastic surgery? It feels like real skin. It feels so good in the hand."
Juanita gave a few "tsk" in surprise.
"It is indeed possible. Since I came to the Special Investigation Unit, I have seen it a few times. The mask is thinner than a piece of paper, and it feels completely the same as the real skin. It's even very breathable so you can wear for a really long time without problems." Karl explained.
"Hmm. Sometimes I forget to take it down myself." Joyce smiled.
"It's just ... does he not mind?" Juanita pointed to Anderson. After all, Anderson was still a child, and his own mother had to wear a mask sometimes. Could he accept it?
Anderson sat on top of the couch and suddenly interrupted, "Mom has two faces, and I've been used to

For Juanita, although he had got no thrilling feeling of love towards her...

Her tolerance and understanding over the years had dissolved his cold heart, not to mention the responsibility he should take. He was sincerely willing to share his life with her.

"Really? Really about to get married?" Joyce's eyes widened in disbelief as she glanced at Juanita and then at Karl, and she could not even hide her excitement.

"Great, congratulations!"

She congratulated from the bottom of her heart.

"What?!" Juanita was a little embarrassed and lowered her head, "I, I haven't agreed yet."

Joyce patted Juanita's back, "Come on, you've been promised a few million times in your mind. Who are you fooling?"

"Joyce!" Juanita gave Joyce a glare and then whirled around and laughed.

She looked at Karl. His eyes would rest on Joyce from time to time, but he would also take care of her feelings and pay attention to her from time to time as well.

She thought that would be enough.

Joyce let out a sigh.

"Joyce, what are you thinking? The fact that you are nowhere to be found, and we don't even know whether you are alive or not is a greater torture to us. Do you know that Karl had ..." Juanita wanted to say something, but suddenly stopped talking and did not continue.

She knew only too well how heavy Karl's burden had been for these four years.

"I'm sorry. I thought that it would pass with time." Joyce sounded apologetic.

"Hey, let's not talk about that. The fact that you are still alive is better than anything else." Juanita wrapped her arms around Joyce hard and tightly, as if she was afraid of losing her again.

"Joyce, give me your phone for a second." Karl suddenly interrupted them and said.

"Oh." Joyce took her cell phone out and handed it to Karl.

Karl took out a phone-like device from his bag, only the size of his palm, and connected it to Joyce's cell phone. Then he opened the device up, entered some code, and then lines of strange code popped up from the screen, obviously installing some program into her cell phone.

"Then you have to catch up on your efforts. Commissioner Gregory will take you home tonight, so take advantage of the opportunity." Joyce glanced ambiguously at Juanita.

Only then did she notice that Juanita's finger, wearing a diamond ring, shone brightly.

Juanita froze before she noticed that she had said the wrong thing. She saw Joyce's gaze staring at her ring.

And, what did she mean? Taking advantage of the opportunity tonight? How could Joyce directly say such a thing in front of Karl?

That was just too straightforward!

She felt so embarrassed!

"Ah, no, no, this ring is actually, not, that ... what ... I didn't mean it just now ..." She flushed instantly, and she felt so embarrassed that she did not even know how to explain at all.

"Don't explain." Karl gently took Juanita's thin shoulders.

The second day.

The sun rose up slowly, shedding the golden light upon the bustling city and setting aside the early morning mist. The outline of high-rise buildings, stretched out with golden clouds, had also gradually become clear.

After Joyce dropped Anderson off at the kindergarten, she took a taxi to Cloud Bay Tower alone.

She had just arrived at the Capital and didn't have a car of her own .

In the future, she might need to use a car every day, and taking a taxi every day was not a long-term solution.

It seemed that she needed to have a car for herself at the Capital.

Soon she arrived at the Cloud Bay Tower.

She stood in the square, looking up and around at the skyscrapers towering into the clouds. The metallic gray facades looked imposing and cold.

She was not familiar with the Capital and thought that Cloud Bay Tower was an ordinary downtown office building.

She didn't expect that it would be one of the landmarks of the Capital.

Such a towering skyscraper was also a property that belonged to Luther.
