My Sweetheart

Chapter 641 Returning to the Quiet

Kathy turned her face away and nodded slowly.

The owner's wife looked at Joseph with a smile. "As for men, take a cold shower in the courtyard."

Kathy subconsciously looked through the window at the small courtyard. She suddenly smiled. Could the sheltered Mr Joseph endure bathing in the public bathroom?

However, Kathy was also going to the public bathhouse for the first time. She felt fresh, but more intense.

Because it was summer, there weren't many people who came to bathe and there weren't many people in the locker room, so she didn't find any naked people.

She had never had such an experience, so she felt as if she was a thief at this moment. She hurried into the cubicle with a washbasin and her clothes. She washed herself as quickly as she could and walked in slippers.

The owner's wife was waiting for him at the door. The two chatted as they walked, "Are you hungry? We can have meal when we get back. Joseph likes sweet and sour ribs the most. You can have a try later."

Kathy put her wet hair behind her ears and nodded. After a moment's indecision, she asked, "Madam, does he come here often?"

"Once a year."

"What is he doing here?"

"Don't all of you in town like to go on vacation? Drink tea, catch fish and eat some farm food."

Kathy was silent. When she was with him three years ago, she didn't know that he had such a habit.

They used to go to high-end hotels when on vacation, but she didn't expect that Joseph would like such a place.

The plastic slippers creaked on the bluestone floor. They just happened to meet a group of children after school. They were chattering, and brought joy to the desolate path.

Kathy was preoccupied with her own thoughts until she returned to the small courtyard. When she opened the door, she was stunned.

The window was half open, and the moonlight filtered in quietly. Joseph turned his back to her, and he could indeed smell a faint scent clearly.

It was not the scent of shampoo or shower gel, but a soft breath that filled the room little by little.

After all, he couldn't help turning around and his arm moved slightly.

At this moment, Kathy did not notice the movement of the man behind her. The bamboo mat was shady, and the slight wind dissipated the heat. At this moment, Kathy only felt that there were bursts of pain in her lower abdomen, which made it difficult for her to sleep.

She curled up her body to be smaller, like a small shrimp. Joseph seemed to have discovered something and asked in a low voice, "Are you cold?"

With that, he had reached out and hugged her into his arms.

Kathy's body stiffened slightly. His hot breath sprayed on both sides of her neck, and her back was pressed against his chest. It was warm and strong, which was an irresistible temptation for her at the moment.

But she didn't dare to rely too much on it, so she subconsciously avoided, and replied in a low voice, "I want to have a rest today."

His hand was on her waist, and he was silent for a while before he hugged her back with a slight force, and whispered, "Yeah."

Kathy was relieved, but she clearly noticed that his palm was slowly going down until it pressed against her lower abdomen, and rubbed it gently.

Kathy didn't stop him, and he didn't stop. The abdominal pain gradually eased a lot. Then Kathy fell asleep in a daze, but the gaze of the man behind her looked hot.

He hadn't let go of her all night, Kathy had fallen asleep well, and he moved closer to her, leaned his chin on her shoulder, and slowly closed his eyes.

Sometimes, a goat raised in the mountains rushed out, seemed that it will not get light, so came back. The hostess was in the small courtyard, she go?" His said that they saw a girl climbing West

West Mountain's terrain was complex. For a girl with a poor sense of direction, it was really easy to get lost.

Joseph paused for a moment, as if he did not know what to say. He only responded indifferently and pulled her hand to go back.

As he stepped out of the bushes, Joseph took off his raincoat and draped it over her.

In the dark night, he led Kathy the way back without hesitation. Her hand had always been clenched into a fist. Rather than being pulled by him, his hand wrapped around her fist, and she had never been able to open it.

After walking down for almost half an hour, they could finally see the light at the foot of the mountain. In the rainy night, it was like a landscape painting.

Kathy walked more slowly and she staggered a little.

Joseph finally stopped. He wiped the rain off his face and looked at her with a slight frown. "Are you tired?"

Kathy forced a smile. "No."

If it was Kathy from before, she would have already thrown herself into her arms and cried.

Joseph pursed his lips and said calmly, "Don't cause me any more trouble."

She avoided his gaze and said ok.

It was already early in the morning when they walked back to the courtyard where they lived. The old couple was still waiting worriedly. They finally heaved a sigh of relief when they saw the two of them.

Kathy pulled away his hand and sat down in the hall. She gritted her teeth and touched her feet.

The hostess's eyes were sharp. She saw her swollen red ankle at a glance. "Ouch," she said with concern. "How did this happen?"

Kathy looked at the hostess embarrassedly and thanked her sincerely who had immediately taken the medicinal liquor.

Joseph stood at the side all the time and his expression was extremely sullen.

Chapter 644 Why Bring Me Here

When Kathy woke up the next day, she was a little dazed and didn't know when she fell asleep last night.

The place next to her was already empty and cold. Apparently Joseph had been up for a while.

Laying on the bed with her eyes closed, Kathy heard the footsteps from the stairs.

Someone knocked on the door outside, "Kathy, are you up?"

Kathy hurriedly finished washing and went to open the door.

"I cooked the porridge." The hostess put the food on the table with a smile, "Drink another bowl of ginger soup after eating. After all, you get wet in the rain yesterday."

Kathy remembered the ginger soup last night, smiled and said, "Thank you both."

"It's my fault. I didn't remind you not to go to West Mountain. It's easy to get lost... Yesterday Joseph came back and found that you were gone. He was so anxious that he went out to look for you. When he came back, he insisted on staying there until he finally found you."

Kathy had been drinking the porridge in silence, and the hostess was still talking, "Later, he kept reminding me to make ginger soup for you..."

"I'm done drinking." Kathy suddenly interrupted the hostess, smiled and said, "Thank you."

Because they will leave in the evening, Kathy started packing.

She folded the clothes and put them neatly in the travel bag.

First she put her own, and then put Joseph's, but when she just put his clothes in it, she tore off his clothes angrily.

Thinking of Joseph's threats to her and maintaining such an obscure relationship with him, she took a deep breath and felt a tremendous pressure on her chest.

At this time, Joseph had already entered, and he sat opposite her. He looked at her with a complex expression in his eyes.

When saying goodbye to the old couple, Kathy was still very reluctant. After all, the days here were too peaceful and comfortable.

It would be perfect without Joseph by her side.

"Come here next time when you are free." The hostess hugged Kathy warmly.

It wasn't until Joseph drove back that Kathy recovered from the sense of loss in a daze, and asked, "Did you... have you paid for the room?"

Joseph curled his lips, but didn't answer.

Kathy turned her head stiffly, and the surrounding area suddenly became quiet. There were not many cars on the highway. It was deserted. Kathy leaned on the seat and looked at the humdrum scenery outside the window. Gradually, she felt sleepy.

When she opened her eyes again, she realized it was completely dark, and the car had parked, and there was no one in the driver's seat.

Kathy unfastened his seat belt and went down. In the dark night, Joseph was leaning against the door of the car and his fingertips held a cigarette end which glowed red in the darkness.

"You... don't you want to rush back?" Kathy couldn't help asking.

He didn't speak and just turned around in the dark. His eyes fell on her, and asked coldly, "What's the matter?"

Kathy hesitated for a while, but still said, "I'll let someone come and pick me up."

He did not answer. He got into the car and turned on the lights. He waited until she was sitting next to her before speaking faintly, "No need. Are you going to see your mother? It just so happened that Zofia brought the child over and was in the same hospital. ."

The car was galloping on the streets of Country F. Kathy looked at the city that was still unfamiliar to her and felt cold all over.

"Are you sure you want Zofia to see us together?" She tried to speak calmly.

He suddenly smiled, and finally turned his head to look at her, "You still have five minutes, maybe you can try to make me change my mind."

Joseph didn't move for a long time before handing her a handkerchief.

"Why bring him here?" Joseph's tone was gloomy.

Zofia noticed his anger, but she still said, "You plan to live in Country F, so Roan and I will live here too."

"I don't agree." Joseph said coldly.

"My brother has arranged everything," Zofia said stubbornly. "Do you really want to be with Kathy?"

"Zofia, don't try to guess me." Joseph's eyes were cold and sharp.

Zofia smiled coolly, "I guessed it right?"

"Joseph, don't forget that you promised Veronica, Roan is your child." Zofia reminded him again and again.

Outside the hospital, Kathy was stopped by John.

Joseph was throwing a whole box of baby cabbage into the cart that was already full of things. He glanced at Kathy idly and smiled, "Kathy, you had better not spoil my good mood."

Kathy bit her lip and watched him buying so many ingredients that they didn't need at all. She chose to remain silent.

Only one cashier channel was opened. The clerk and the man who looked like the manager just waited respectfully. When they saw the two of them, they apologized and said, "It may take you some time. We need to scan the barcode for these items, otherwise the inventory will not match. ."

Joseph always smiled gently, "of course, we have to pay."

The clerk quickly took the shopping cart and scanned the barcodes one by one. The sound of the machine was very clear in the empty space, and finally the final amount was displayed on the screen.

When Joseph went to find his wallet, he found that it was in John's hand.

Frowning, he naturally turned his head to look at Kathy, "Did you bring money?"

"No." Kathy replied directly. After speaking, she felt a little strange. They seemed to be here to eat and run...

The young clerk couldn't help but smile long ago.

"Mr Joseph, you don't need to pay, it's just for reconciliation." The manager hurriedly said to resolve the embarrassment at the moment, "I'll send you out."

In the end, the payment was charged to Joseph's account. Joseph pushed the shopping cart into the parking lot, and put the things in the car one by one before returning to the apartment.

Joseph's apartment had always been taken care of, so it was clean.

But when the specialty products brought from the town and the ingredients bought from the supermarket were put in the kitchen, it was a little messy.

Chapter 648 Getting Stronger

After all this was done, Kathy's heart was a little empty. She knew that she would have insomnia tonight, so she could just deal with business affairs.

After turning on the computer, she couldn't help but search for news about herself.

A few days ago, there were hundreds of pages of news under her name, all about her involvement in the relationship between Joseph and Zofia, but now there are no scandals like this, as if it had never existed in this world. .

After she clicked several pages, there was still nothing.

But Kathy did not breathe a sigh of relief. Joseph still cared about Zofia. Was he afraid that these scandals will affect Zofia's mood?

However, there were actually quite a few people who knew about this. Alexia called her immediately after knowing it, but Kathy didn't know how to explain it.

Or, there was no need to explain at all, she did just that.

When it was nearly dawn, Kathy was still sitting at the desk alone and didn't feel sleepy at all.

A phone call suddenly brought her back to her senses. Kathy received a call from John and he relayed Joseph's itinerary. Joseph was going to attend a conference abroad and will not be in Country F for a month.

So, was he telling her that she didn't need to live in this apartment anymore?

She hung up the phone in silence, and felt a lot more relaxed at the moment.

After finishing the meeting, she quickly went to Booth Group and devoted herself to work.

She thought that she didn't sleep all night last night, she would be uncomfortable today, but her body seemed to be used to staying up like this, and it was getting stronger and stronger.

The string of blisters on her hand gradually disappeared, but it still looked a bit ugly. Because the ointment was applied, it didn't hurt.

The working pace throughout the day was very fast. When she was about to get off work, Alberta knocked on the door and came in, looking a little gloomy.

"What's the matter?" Kathy was too busy to look up.

"Vice President Blake Brooks, who has been following me, resigned today." Alberta sighed.

Chapter 649 He Will Do His Best to Help Her

In the early autumn, it always rains.

The young man got out of the taxi, opened the umbrella himself, held the door with one hand, and waited for the girl to come out thoughtfully.

He always kept a distance from her, but always paid attention not to let the rain drip to the woman beside him.

Soothing music was playing in the lobby. Kathy ordered a cup of scented tea and made a red robe for Jaydon and handed it to him.

His eyes kept falling on her long and white hands. After taking it over, he smiled and said, "Thank you."

The two hadn't seen each other for a long time, and the scandal about her and Joseph in Country F was raging, but in less than a day they disappeared quickly.

At that time, he had just gone on a business trip, and when he called Kathy, her mobile phone had been switched off.

He was worried, but they were no longer the lover. He can't go to her.

After all, she said such cold words to him at that time.

But now this Kathy he saw seemed to be unlike the woman he knew at the beginning.

She seemed to be used to hiding something with a smile. When he first met her, her eyes were clean and clear, but now they looked like dark blue water, which involuntarily reminded him of Joseph, who had always been unfathomable.

"Thank you for coming to see me." Kathy took a sip of tea. Remembering how embarrassed the two were when they met for the last time, she couldn't help but laugh at herself.

Jaydon was originally wearing a formal suit jacket, but when he went out, he tore off his tie. The casual dress and his short hair made him look more handsome.

He smiled, showing white teeth, "Nothing."

"Thank you for what I asked you to do before." Kathy raised her eyes, her bangs scattered. When she smiled, her eyes were like the beautiful crescent moon.

Joseph smiled, resting Kathy's head on his arm and holding her completely in his arms. His thin lips kissed her brows, and then closed his eyes.

The night was quiet and long. The person next to her was already fast asleep. She leaned against his arms, her breathing was still steady, but her eyes were always open and very bright.

When Kathy woke up in the morning, she leaned to one side. The man next to her hadn't gotten up yet. He took her in his arms and kissed her eyebrows, "Wake up?"

Her eyes were still heavy with sleep, as if she hadn't remembered where it was for a while.

"Go change clothes, and then help me get my clothes."

"What?"

"My clothes will be brought later." He squeezed her cheek lightly, "I didn't bring anything when I came here yesterday."

Kathy answered, and someone came to ring the doorbell just after washing up.

She took it and threw it directly to Joseph, "Are you busy today?"

"Not really."

After finishing himself, he watched Kathy put on makeup in front of the mirror.

She rarely wore makeup, but he liked her clean face without makeup.

Kathy just penciled her eyebrows, and didn't let him wait too long, so they went out for breakfast together.

In the revolving restaurant on the top floor, Joseph watched the news on the tablet and took a sip of coffee. He said indifferently, "Let's talk."

"What to talk?"

"I know you have never wanted to take over Booth Group, and as for Jennifer's condition, I am afraid she shouldn't be too tired after she recovers. Bridges Group is about to be completely controlled by Reece now. I don't think you will believe him." In the sunlight, the man's eyes and brows were shiny. He was wearing a white shirt in a beige sweater. He curled his thin lips and said, "Well, let Booth Group merge into the Joseph's Group."

Kathy paused, this was indeed... a good way.
