491-Watched Her Slip Away

Theo's POV:

I watched her stare at me, and I knew in that moment that I had fucked up. I didn't even crack a smile as I stood there, planning where I would flee if she attacked me.

Lazio and Maynard gulped loudly, slowly striding behind me like cowards. I wasn't scared of her, but I didn't want them to rely on me when I couldn't rely on myself.

"Why?" She got up from her feet and asked me, "Did you not know how much losing you hurt me?" Her voice broke, and her eyebrows slid together as she expressed her pain through her expressions.

"I couldn't say another word because she wasn't done yet.

"I have cried for you for two years, Theo. Is that not enough? Why would you make me go through that pain again?" She whimpered, refusing to come closer to me.

I understand what I did was wrong, but only because the circumstances were different.

Right now, we need to make sure Nia wakes up.

"You think you are the only one who suffers?" I finally spoke to her, and she let me say,

"Enya! I feel as devastated as you do when we are not together. This match has become my fear. I was dreading sending you to the match without a wolf. And I knew the only you could feel the anger and that Nia will wake up is when you will go through something similar to last time. And look! It worked!" I explained to her, watching her stop crying and stare at my face in silence.

I can only imagine how she felt when she saw me dying. But that would help her survive.

“Besides, you slapping Lazio was the highlight of the night.’ I suddenly added, and the little smile she gave me comforted my soul. Yeah! That was hard,” Lazio complained, rubbing his cheek.

“Thank goodness I stepped away when I realized she was losing her shit,” Maynard added, making her frown at the two of them.

After she was done glaring at them, her eyes traveled back to me, and a smile plastered across her lips once again.

“Come here!” I spread my arms for her, and, without wasting a minute, she ran into my arms. I closed my arms around her and felt her body heat up against mine. If these two were not around, I would have instantly stripped her naked and had the wildest sex with her. But I didn’t want her to use her energy before the match.

“Okay! That’s really something. I got slapped, he got yelled at, and he is getting all the hugs,” Lazio complained, waving his hand at us.

“Go get a hug from your own mate, I scoffed, watching him mimic me with overdramatic expressions.

“Okay, now that she got her wolf, we should head back and start training her,” Maynard told us, and that’s when Enya broke the hug to look at him. I could tell she was nervous and wanted to get started on training. I wouldn’t be lying; I was afraid of her. But I had a backup plan.

“Can I first connect a little with Nia? It has been two years that we couldn’t talk, and there is so much we have to talk about,” Enya requested, looking at us and wanting some time with her wolf.

“She is going to talk about us with her,” Maynard whispered in Lazio’s ears, and Lazio pouted.

“Nia will hate me too now,” Lazio was gladly self-aware of the destruction he had caused now.

“Please?” she looked my way and asked me, forming a cute little pout from her lips. I don’t know why she would do that, because now I can’t say no to her even when I badly want to interrupt her.

I just had this feeling that she shouldn't leave my sight, but I didn't want to control her.

That was such a small thing she was requesting from me with so much cuteness and hope. I couldn't say no to her.

"Okay! But be careful around the woods and return soon, okay?*" I told her, giving her one last hug as she walked into the deep woods to transition and take a run around.

"Wow! I am so happy Nia is back." Lazio rubbed his palms excitedly and happily. We were all happy for Enya, and I could only imagine how pleased she would be at the moment. It truly feels good when your human side connects well with your wolf's side, which reminded me of Thiago.

I am not going to let him come out and suffer. He will have to wait until this whole mess is over. I have grown very overprotective of him.

"I hope she comes back safely," I uttered, grabbing my phone because it kept vibrating in my pants.

"I was worried you would let out a breath," Maynard said. He didn't lie. Pretending to be dead was not at all easy. I had to keep my breath in. That's why Maynard had to drag her away, or she would have noticed I was alive and breathing.

"It's Kellice. Let's tell her the good news," I said, picking up the phone happily. "Don't let her wolf wake up," she said in a panicked state before she could even let me greet her.

I frowned in confusion, wondering what she was talking about.

"What are you talking about? I was just going to give you the good news. The plan worked. Her wolf woke up," I said, but the reaction from her side was not at all what I had expected to get after such a triumph.

"Theo! You need to cage her instantly. Don't let her get away from your sight," she warned me, making me slide a gulp down my throat.

"What are you on about?" I asked her, watching Lazio and Maynard feel the intensity of my words.

“What Corbin injected her was a potion that would make her walk straight to him whenever her wolf wakes up.” As soon as she told us what she had found in her blood, I lost my mind.

492-Whisked Away!

Theo's POV:

After Kellice called me, I couldn't wait to find out why she made such a huge statement. Maynard!" Look over there for Enya. "And Lazio! go search every area for her," I told them while I decided to go into the deep woods where she said she would be taking a run.

Lazio and Maynard looked equally worried about Enya. We all shifted and started running around like crazy. Everywhere I went, I met disappointed and not her. It was as if she had gone missing from the world. I tried looking for her in the mountains in my fully transitioned state, using all my strength and energy to find her, but I couldn't locate her for life.

My heart was racing inside my chest, worried about where she had gone. After we met up on the road in our human forms, I realized none of us had spotted her.

"I lost track of her scent on the road, which means she took the road instead of going into the deep woods," I told them, feeling afraid of her.

"We should speak to Kellice and try to know what else she knows about this," Lazio suggested, and that seemed like the only option left to us.

We traveled in the same car to meet up with Kellice, who had been trying her best to locate Enya.

"She is not with you." Kellice rushed over to us when we entered the mansion together.

Her eyes were behind us as she was looking forward to meeting Enya.

“No! we couldn’t find her,” I told her in exhaustion. I can’t believe I didn’t listen to my heart and let her wander around until she had gone completely missing.

Did you do the locating spell?” Maynard asked Kellice, who nodded.

“It is showing the same foggy nonsense that I was seeing when I was trying to locate Oswin and Mother Witch,” she explained.

“So they are together now,” Lazio slapped his forehead, restlessly walking back and forth.

“Corbin was clever enough to inject that thing in her,” Kellice then started explaining to us what was Corbin up to.

“It is a potion made with special ingredients. Corbin must have asked a witch to make it for her. Since he wanted to bring Enya to himself, he added his blood to the potion. So whenever Enya transitions, her wolf will first want to meet the person who injected his blood into her. It was used in ancient times whenever they shunned the late bloomers out of the pack and would want them to return when they get their wolves. It was easy for the sunned werewolves to find their way back to their alphas. It only works at the first transition,” Kellice explained, making us realize why Enya so desperately wanted to transition and set her wolf free.

Nia didn’t even know, but she urged meeting Corbin and inform him she has transitions.

“Maybe he did it because he wanted to know if Enya has a wolf or not because he was going to have a match with her?” Lazio tried to make sense of the situation, but something didn’t add up.

But he injected her with that potion long ago, before I was even resurrected.’ I explained why it wasn’t possible.

“Then why would he do that? What can he possibly get from Nia?” Maynard rubbed his chin, brainstorming over the situation.

“But who helped h—,” As Lazio continued to question the witch who might have helped Corbin, only one name popped into our heads.

“Emelia!” I muttered under my breath.

“Wait! she is not with you guys.” Valerie, who had been silently standing beside Janet, asked.

“Yesterday, when I was looking everywhere for you, I went to Maynard’s mansion and found Christina there,” she started talking to herself. “I heard her talk to her mother about Enya. She said Corbin would have her in no time. I didn’t think too much of her as I thought maybe he wanted to pursue her, which everybody knew. But now that Kellice told us what will happen when Enya will transition, doesn’t that mean wherever Corbin is, Enya is there?” she explained it better. We all shared a glance and watched Kellice for some more answers.

“That can’t be it. Emelia had lost her powers long ago,” she explained, making us frown and even confused.

“Corbin must have— wait a minute!” Her face looked like she had seen a ghost when realization struck her. Mother witch! They got her,” she sighed, slapping her forehead as hard as she could.

“I am going to go have a word with Corbin,” I grunted, unable to keep the anger inside me any longer.

If he has Enya, I better hurry and find her.

“We will come with you,” Lazio and Corbin said in unison as they followed me to the door. We didn’t want to waste time on cars, so we started sprinting like crazy, using our monster strength to reach Corbin’s mansion.

It took us time. In fact, I was the first who reached before the others. The moment I was at the mansion, I acknowledged that Corbin wouldn’t be stupid enough to keep Enya here.

The mansion was empty. Lazio and Maynard arrived after I searched the whole mansion from corner to corner but couldn’t find any trace of Enya. Even her scent was not available here.

“She is not even here,” I mumbled.

But why is the mansion empty? I understand he took her somewhere, but where are the guards?" Maynard's question made me turn around and look at him.

He wasn't wrong.

"Or! Maybe it was a trap," Lazio had only said that when arrows started shooting at us.

We jumped around and hid behind anything we could find. I saw a big, bulky warrior werewolf come downstairs, with weapons and a whole ass army behind him.

I looked over at the two, who were hiding together, and then all hell broke loose.

The guards started reaching us, and we were left with no choice but to transition.

However, they had some crazy plans for me.

The moment I started transitioning, the water started falling from the ceiling, preventing my transition. As a lycan, I am afraid of water in my fully transitioned state.

493-Maybe Brothers Again

Theo's POV:

I could only use my strength in my human body; transitioning fully was no longer an option. I jumped at the guard, but he began to transition.

It was as if there were many guards transitioning while I stood in there, soaking wet in my human form. I started fighting them as much as I could. They really thought full transition was all I needed to beat them.

I attacked the guard, who had turned into a big furry wolf, and dug my nails into his skin, making him howl and grunt in agonizing pain. While the others kept jumping at me from all around, Lazio and Maynard shifted into their big alpha wolves and fought the others off.

I was doing my best, fighting and tearing apart everyone. By then, I could tell there was an observer standing at the top of the stairs, on call and informing Corbin of everything.

He noticed how his men couldn't win me over, even when they had successfully prevented my full transformation.

I didn't waste my energy on the observer and kept fighting the others while some of them transitioned back to using weapons on us.

That's when I made one little mishap, and my whole concentration was diverted. The observer whispered one name that led me to look away from the guards grunting in front of me. "We got your Enya!" The observer's words fell to my ears, and I stopped moving for a second to look up and stare at him. That's when the others attacked me. I felt a numbing pain when they knocked me down and got on top of me.

One of the wolves bit my neck and ate a chunk of my meat while the others started whipping me with silver belts.

"ARRRGHH!" I let out an agonizing howl, waiting for the water to run out, but then I could no longer feel the pain anywhere. I was still face down, but the belts never struck me.

It wasn't until I turned my neck around and saw Lazio had transitioned back and threw himself on me. He was the one taking all the hits while Maynard was protecting my head and face, taking hits to himself.

It was something I definitely didn't expect from them as previously; they have always just disappointed me. Even when I died, they didn't bat an eye, but today was different. Now that they were clear that Enya was no longer a trophy, they were ready to die for me. I a—m fine,* Lazio grunted in pain, trying to tell me to not get him off. His blood was running down and soaking my shirt. I couldn't take it anymore.

What is the worst thing the water could do to me?

Burn my skin!

So be it. I have to find Enya and protect her, no matter what.

So I did just that.

I pushed Lazio away and to the side and got on my feet. Maynard was badly injured and bleeding, too.

The observer suddenly looked attentive when he noticed I was transitioning beyond the pain I was feeling. My bones cracked and my muscles stretched. Every inch of my body felt a surge of emotions and anger. Everybody began to look smaller than my body grew triple the size of them.

My neck stretched back, and I let out a monstrous howl before attacking them. I shredded them into a million tiny pieces with my pointing claws and dug deeper into their skins with my sharp teeth until none of them was able to stay up on their feet.

Their painful cries as I tackled them to the deepest pit of agony were all that could be heard in the foyer. I noticed Maynard and Lazio rushing upstairs in the direction of the observer, who started getting away from them.

Once I have finished my job in the foyer, I kneel down and prepare to transform back into my human form because my skin can no longer take the pain.

I stayed on the floor with my head down while Maynard and Lazio caught the observer and dragged him downstairs for me.

“This asshole knows where Corbin took Enya,* Maynard grunted, slapping the man in the back of his head and shoving him towards me. Not to the lycan,” the man whimpered, stepping back and feeling fearful of me. I was in my human form, but he had seen what I was capable of doing. Where did he take her?” I asked, not raising my head but only my eyes.

“I do—n’t know,” the man stuttered, making me close my eyes and take a deep breath. I knew he was lying.

“I am going to ask you again, and I want you to answer me. After that, I will not ask you twice.” I was berthing like a bull, ready to transition if I had to again.

The good thing is that they have run out of water too. So nobody was going to save him from my wrath if he didn't just tell me what I wanted to know. Did you not see what he did to your men?- Maynard grunted at him, grabbing him by his collar and yanking him back and forth.

"He will do worse with you," Lazio joined, groaning angrily.

"I— I know where they are," the man changed his statement once he realized Corbin might not punish him that badly the way I will punish him.

Then he started giving us directions to where Corbin had taken Enya. So it was true;

Corbin had been up to something and was waiting for Enya's wolf to wake up.

After the observer told us everything, Lazio and Maynard beat him up while I prepared to leave for Enya. It was an hour – long journey, and we didn't know the exact location. We just knew they were somewhere on the island of Boga!

We had to inform Kellice where we were headed, and soon our journey began. I was worried for Enya, but I was also certain that if he had hurt her even a little, I would kill him in a heartbeat.

494-They Are Nasty For This.

Enya's POV:

After Nia woke up, she expressed her urge to transition. I couldn't help but grant her permission and let her run around. The moment I transitioned, I realized she didn't even go into the deep woods; she started running straight to what seemed like the cursed pack of Corbin Shaun. At this point, I couldn't take back control of her.

She had already gone too far. She wasn't even letting me take over the control, and I knew something was wrong. I could hear her whimper from time to time while she ran like crazy to his mansion. It was as if she knew what she was doing was wrong, but she had to do it. When we reached the mansion, we were greeted by the guards. They let us in. Nia entered the foyer, howling a little, and then, in her shady vision, appeared Corbin.

“Ah! The wolf of Enya,” he let out a smirk, approaching us and gently running his hand through our fur.

“I knew you would come the instant you transitioned.’ He sat down beside us and whispered to us, petting us like we were his dogs.

I wanted to come out, but she was still unable to break free from whatever sources had pulled her here.

Mr. Observer!” Corbin called for a man who knew exactly what Corbin would ask for. The man gave him a syringe filled with something that was meant for us.

It will hurt a bit, but don’t worry; I will dress you up when you transition back into your human form. It is not like I am interested in your body anymore,” he whispered before he stabbed us with the injection. It didn’t take me long to acknowledge that it was wolfbane that he had injected me with.

My body started going back into transition and also into a deep slumber. I am sure I went unconscious and then transitioned back to my human form.

It was heartbreaking.

I found my wolf only to get caged by that asshole again.

I didn’t wake up for another few hours, but when I did start waking up, I realized I was on rough ground with dead leaves and a cold breeze hitting my skin and making it even rougher.

“Ah!” I exhaled in agony, waking myself up but unable to get up on my feet. My body was still heavily injected with wolfbane, to the point that I could barely keep my eyes open.

For the next few minutes, the only thing I could see was the blurriness.

“You fucking stay away from her.” Those threats belonged to some familiar voice. I blinked my eyes hard and cleared my vision to see who was threatening whom. The first thing I noticed when getting my full set of senses was the fact that I was indeed lying somewhere in the open on the ground.

There were tall trees around me, but they were at a good distance from me. On my left side was someone tied to a tree, and on my right side was also someone tied to a tree.

I broke free from the state of dizziness with a lot of difficulty and struggle and noticed who was on my left side.

Mother witch!" I whispered in heavy breaths, turning to my right side to see my brother tied to the tree; badly injured but grunting at the man in front of me and warning him to stay away from me.

It didn't take me long to look ahead and watch Corbin pass a smile at me.

"What is going on? Why did you abduct us?' I asked in heavy breaths, placing my hands on the ground and forcing my body up. With the lack of strength and pain I was feeling in my body, I could only sit on my knees instead of standing on my feet. I asked Corbin, who looked like he was having a lot of fun watching me suffer.

"Aw! Enya wants to know why I brought her here. He mimicked my voice, making the guards behind him crack a laugh.

He was wearing a long brown coat and had his hands shoved in the pockets.

"Hm! Let's see. How about you tell me what you have that I can gain from?" He walked closer and knelt down in front of me, mocking me by sitting too close to me, yet I was unable to do him any harm. It wasn't just that they had injected me with wolfbane; they had put me in chains. And the chains seemed a bit different from the ones Oswin and Mother Witch were tied with.

"You want my wolf?" I frowned, not understanding what I could possibly give to the alpha king.

"I didn't inject you with that potion for your wolf," he scoffed, getting offended that I thought he would need my wolf.

So definitely it wasn't about me challenging him for a match because that happened way later.

Oh! Before I forget, I would love to introduce somebody to you." He stepped aside and pointed at the black canopy behind him.

The canopy had someone who he thought would be able to shock me with their presence, and I was shocked when Christina walked out of the canopy with Emelia behind her.

“How about we start with an introduction first?” Corbin smirked, wrapping his arm around her back and pulling her over to his chest.

The sight was scary.

When did Christina move on from Maynard?

“Here! meet my chosen mate and the future Luna Queen of the world, Christina!” He announced, making her blush when he crashed his lips against hers, and the two started making out, using their tongues.

They didn’t have to go that far to shock me. I was already stunned at watching them talk about being each other’s chosen mates.

Christina’s little red dress and preparations were themselves a sign that she was extremely happy to have a powerful mate for once.

My daughter finally found the one I wanted her to be with,” Emelia smirked, watching them get into action and grope each other in front of their victims.

495-Shamelessly Sucking Boobs.

Enya’s POV:

They went to the canopy after what was supposed to be a light make-out session had turned into full- fledged sex.

I could hear Christina moan loudly and demand that he fuck her every hole. It was traumatizing. But I shouldn't have expected anything good from her. The one who betrayed us so well for years was good at anything.

"It feels good to finally see you suffer while my daughter is enjoying. There was once a time when I was in the bedroom with Lord Shaun and your mother—oh! She was furious.

That was the day she decided to let her demons win and do what nobody thought anyone was capable of doing. She turned into a devil herself." Emelia was yammering, helping us ignore the loud moaning and grunting coming from the canopy.

"And you think killing my father justifies your actions? Just because you suffered, you thought you got the certificate to be bad to anyone who you don't like. My mother did everything to stay in power, and your daughter is doing the same. The way my mother betrayed you over time, your daughter did the same thing, too. The only difference was that my mother was earning money by ruining lives, while your daughter was just angry at the world. What makes you any better than my mother? What makes your daughter any better than my mother?" I muttered at Emelia, making her glare at me in anger for comparing her daughter to my mother.

"How dare you?" She rushed over to me and slapped me hard in the face. I didn't knock down, but I looked the other way.

"You have both turned into evil souls," I commented, making her grunt some more. She was a victim once and she realized, being a victim was able to get her away with the messed up things she was doing to others.

"You land your hand on my sister, and I will tear it apart from your shoulder," Oswin yelled after he had watched Emelia get physical with me.

I turned to him and smiled. Not because he was taking my side, but because I was honestly afraid I would never see him alive.

"Ah! The brother of the year award goes to this idiot," Emelia said, stepping back and exhaling a breath full of air, shaking her head at the sight of Oswin. Do you not know what her mother did to you and your mother?" Emelia placed her hands on her waist and reminded Oswin of my mother's horrible acts.

“And you think that is enough for me to hate my sister?” Oswin let out a laugh at her. You can fool others with this, but not me. My sister is innocent. No matter what kind of things you tell me Hazel did to my mother and me, I will never accuse my sister of those. However, I will come for you for hurting my sister.” Oswin, being a level-headed and logical person, yelled back at Emelia and then spat on the ground. Emelia looked furiously at him for not being affected by her words.

“I will leave you two siblings for a good catch-up because that is going to be the last time you are ever seeing each other,” she faked a sad pout before laughing manically and walking away to the other canopy behind the main one.

“Are you okay?” my brother and I asked each other in unison. We smiled after realizing how we were in sync before I turned to look at Mother Witch.

“It will soon be over,” I whispered to her.

She was badly beaten up like an animal by them. I didn’t understand what it was that Corbin wanted so badly that he didn’t care how many lives he was taking in the process.

You must have met Kellice.’ She kept her head down when talking to me. “She must have told you about your curse,” she continued, sounding super guilty.

“She did,” I said.

“I don’t know how to look into the eyes of the little kid whose entire life got messed up because of some angry witches, but I tried to make it up to you by bringing back Thiago!” she uttered, making me smile.

“And that’s all I needed.” As soon as she heard me say that, she raised her face and watched me give her a smile.

“You are not angry with me?” she asked me in shock.

No! Why would I be? What my mother did was horrible. She used all the powers she had stolen from the witches who deserved them and did horrible acts. You had to be attentive and make sure I didn’t end up becoming like my mother. I understand where it all originated from.” I tried being thoughtful because I couldn’t accuse them when I was holding their powers and ruining years of their hard work.

“I wish I could meet Thiago again. He is the one who really kept you happy and safe,” coming from my brother, it really made me feel proud of Thiago. But I don’t get it. Why did they capture us? What could he want from me, from you two?” I asked them, staring at them one by one.

I could tell that the two looked petrified to talk about it. But there was no way they could keep it a secret any longer.

“Emelia was the one who suggested my abduction so that she could force me into casting an anti-locator spell,” the mother witch claimed, “since she doesn’t have any magic herself.” She finished.

“And they abducted you—because,” Mother witch took a brief pause, making my heart race inside my chest. Obviously, whatever it was that he wanted from me was the reason these two were here.

“What? what does he want from me?” I asked, panicking and afraid of what it might be.

“Corbin wants your magic,” she said, and my soul seemed to have left my body until I recalled something.

“I don’t even have magic in me anymore,” I whispered in bewilderment.

Maybe you weren’t given a chance to realize after Nia returned, so did your magic!” She finished, and all I could do was let out a gasp.
