I didn't understand why she was being so pleasant to him until I noticed her biting her lip. Oh! She had a crush on him. It reminded me of my own days when I used to be infatuated with the brothers.

"I'm kind of in the middle of a conversation here," Silas said bluntly, hoping she would take the hint. Instead, she pouted and placed her hands on her hips.

"No, no, no! I wouldn't want you to waste your time," she wagged her finger at him, making me laugh at her foolishness. She turned to me, giving me a deadly glare, but then remembered that I was supposed to be the Luna of the pack for now.

"Carla! If you really want to help, go inside and grab some of the trays from the maids. They've been working since morning, and you're just arriving now?" Every word of mine elicited a reaction from her. She looked shocked, then offended, and finally awkwardly nodded, recalling Brody's lesson for the day.

Gosh, it was so much fun.

As Carla walked away, I noticed Nash standing at a distance.

"As for the comment I made to your father about being afraid of—" I fell silent when I saw Nash approach us. I didn't feel like explaining anything anymore. In fact, I shouldn't be explaining anything to my mate, Silas, who had left me like a coward after mating with me.

"Nora-" Nash attempted to speak, but I sighed and interrupted.

"I'll sit with him. Spare me the lectures." With an eye roll, I returned to the living room, leaving the two behind.

Everyone had begun eating, but I could sense the awkwardness in the air. Janet was upset and barely touched her food, drawing the attention of the brothers, who had been very observant since the morning. Carla kept sneaking glances at Silas, making him visibly uncomfortable. Lord Atwood was busy feeding me as I now sat next to him.

I was getting anxious, wanting to leave this place so I wouldn't waste time and could meet up with my children.

"By the way, I heard you guys are leaving in an hour or so?" Brody asked the brothers with minimal excitement. I nodded my head rather visibly, excited.

"Why, didn't you know? I heard you told the council that you were uncomfortable with our presence," Nash said, not holding back and speaking openly.

I found it amusing when Brody was called out for his games.

"I didn't know you'd be asked to leave so soon," Brody now had to come up with a lie, with all eyes on him. It was quite a sight— caught red-handed talking trash about his guests.

"Yeah, right," Ryker hissed, and Brody grunted in response.

"And we would like to invite you and your beautiful Luna, Nora, to our pack for dinner, as we couldn't congratulate you on your wedding before," Lord Atwood said, shaking me in my seat with his invitation.

My fingers tightened around the fork I was holding. I had already decided that I'd never return there.

"Oh, I wish we could come. But we're sort of busy these days," Brody said, clearly not wanting to miss a single day of arena and earning money.

"I'm sure you can manage some time. It is the Alpha Kings' wish," Lord Atwood said, cleverly using his son's title to make his point.

We were left with no option but to nod in agreement.

372—A Little Luxury

Nora:

"Do visit us," Lord Atwood said, patting my head affectionately, making my eyes well up with tears. I hadn't acted the way I used to with him. I simply nodded and offered him a very forced smile. I began to wonder if we made a mistake by lying about the wedding. We should have used the excuse of acceptance only, which did happen. But faking an alpha's wedding could be a trouble as there is no proof of that ever happening.

The brothers had loaded their bags into the cars and looked visibly disturbed. While Lord Atwood, Brody, and the others spoke together, the brothers stood next to the car. Cain stood straight, tapping his fingers on his wallet, Nash was in front of the car with his hand on its roof and his head turned towards me, Ryker leaned back against the car with his arms folded, and Silas kicked at little rocks while sneaking glances at me through his thick eyebrows.

I could tell they were discussing me. Ryker kept nodding, Cain squinted his eyes, and Nash made occasional comments. Then Ryker pushed himself off the car and walked towards me. I quickly straighten my posture. This last interaction should go very well. They must not return but then why the heck did i feel like there was a little urge in me that they should stay?

"We are leaving," he declared.

"Have a safe journey," I replied, not showing much concern, quickly shutting down my emotions again. It was easy to mask my emotions now.

"But don't you think we won't return?" Nash followed his brother, making a statement that sent chills down my spine.

“You should not waste your time and let me live my life peacefully,” I groaned.

“You didn’t let us live peacefully, so now we won’t let you live peacefully,” Cain said, making his brothers chuckle.

“It’s not some game-” I began to scold, but was interrupted when Silas approached and brutally cut me off.

“Exactly. It is not a fucking game,” he said, his tone harsher than his brothers’. He neither chuckled nor smirked.

“Long story short, we will come back and take you with us. You can enjoy whatever time you have left here,” Nash made an open threat. I didn’t get a chance to warn them against the idea because the others were now coming towards them to say their goodbyes.

We stepped away while the brothers got into their vehicles, all casting strange looks my way before starting their cars and leaving.

“Ugh, they wasted the whole day,” Brody said, turning his attention to me. “Are you okay?” The nerve of him.

“Don’t ask me that question unless you truly care,” I said, rolling my eyes as I took off my jewelry and tossed it on the ground, eliciting a gasp from his royal Gamma and the council member.

“I do care,” Brody replied, though he had become shameless. It was odd how they all seemed to run away when I wanted attention and care, yet they openly pursued me when I took a step back.

“But you will have to stay here in the mansion, not in the quarters,” he added, making a demand that didn’t even sound crazy to me. If anything, he was offering me even more luxury.

“Really? All four of them?” I asked, and he suddenly went silent.

“But they will be in separate rooms. One of them-” I knew Roman would be in a separate room. The way he resisted letting me keep all my children together made me wonder if he knew that once they were all in one place, I would plan an escape.

“But you will get to decide how much time you want to spend with them. It won’t be like you’ll only meet them when you’ve fought a mutant. You’ll have them 24/7, only leaving for missions and fights, like a working mom. You’ll return to your room where your babies are,” he added. Honestly, I didn’t expect him to grant me so much leniency. He had been quite negative about it from the beginning, so I didn’t want to lose this opportunity.

“Okay!” I quickly agreed, and Brody turned to Jerry.

“You heard me, make preparations,” he ordered, his eyes still on “Brody! Why would you-” Jerry started to complain, but Brody raised his hand, silencing him as he showed his plan.

Nora:

“How do you feel?” Brody asked as he opened the door for me. It was the same room he had introduced me to when I first arrived at his pack.

“Hmmm,” I murmured, nodding my head as I took in the interior. The room had not changed, I guess he had kept it locked after throwing me into that small prison.

“I didn’t let anyone use this room after you,” he said, though I rolled my eyes, knowing he couldn’t see it since he was facing away from

1. me.

“What are these?” I raised an eyebrow at the bassinet and noticed the wide smile on Brody’s face.

“I bought these for you and the babies,” he said, shyly resting his hand on the bassinet as if I should be grateful for his generosity.

“I don’t want these,” I mumbled, shaking my head.

“What? Then where do you plan to make the babies sleep?” His voice sounded a bit dry after hearing that. I could tell he expected me to be appreciative.

“Back in my prison-” I began to say, but he cut me off.

“That wasn’t a prison. It was your room,” he said, the hurt in his eyes making me scoff.

while she stood behind them, watching them work. After they left, Mrs. Fisher decided to stay.

It felt like she wouldn’t leave until she had caused some trouble. I was ready to face her with more confidence this time.

“You must be feeling victorious,” she hissed.

“Of course I am,” I shrugged, trying to provoke her further.

“How did you manage to achieve all this?” she asked bitterly, shaking her head as though she were someone I needed to answer.

“What do you mean by ‘how’? It’s easy, you know. Just hunch your body down, slouch your shoulders a bit, and then shake these jugglers,” I said, shaking my breasts and eliciting a gasp from her.

The look of disgust on her face was priceless. I started laughing loudly while she grew more annoyed.

“How can you laugh-” she began, but fell silent when I stopped laughing and narrowed my eyes at her. I didn’t understand why she wanted to argue when she was so afraid of me that she couldn’t even speak once I stopped smiling.

“I can give you a helpful tip. When you stop poking your nose into other people’s business and let them live, you’ll be happy too. You’ll get to laugh, not at others’ tears, but from happiness,” I said, leaning in close and looking her straight in the eyes.

The way she quickly nodded and gulped told me she understood me very well now.

She gave me a nod out of fear and hurried to the door, only to stop and turn around to speak to me one last time for the night. “Alpha Brody said you can meet Roman whenever you want. But when you are with him, this room will be locked with nannies taking care of these babies.” She left the keys to the other room for me, and this was the only time I felt tears welling up.

I didn’t want this separation from my babies. But what else could I do?

Nora:

I have taken care of the needs of my little ones and now I’m left to take care of Roman. He was always in the back of my mind. It was still very unbelievable to me that I carried the babies of all my mates at once. But how was it possible? How did Silas get me pregnant in just a day? It didn’t make sense, but nothing made sense anymore.

I reached the room at the top of the floor and took a deep breath before unlocking it. There guards outside the room, and inside, two ere nannies were actively taking care of Roman. However, he was still crying when I entered.

“Oh, thank goodness. He’s your baby, right?” The nanny quickly ran to me, handing him over, “He’s been crying non–stop.” She seemed restless and also sleep–deprived.

“He cries a lot,” the other nanny complained with a sad smile on her lips. I didn’t blame them. Even I had noticed that Roman was always restless. It made me feel so guilty for not being with him.

“It’s okay. I am here to take care of him. You two go rest,” I gave them a nod and held my baby close, smiling at him.

He had suddenly stopped crying and was staring at my face with his bright gray eyes before his cute little lips began to curl down and he started to cry again.

“Oh no, I’m so sorry for being away. But Mommy is here now,” I tried to comfort him, but he seemed upset with me.

“Having trouble?” Rollo entered without knocking, as the door had been left open by the nannies.

“You can’t help,” I scoffed at him.

Every time I recalled that the reason my babies couldn’t be with me was because the Royal Beta and Royal Gamma had agreed with their Alpha’s punishment, I felt like giving attitude to Rollo.

“People say I’m really good with kids,” he said, stepping closer and peering over my shoulder at my baby.

“Whoa, someone’s cranky,” he mumbled and stepped closer, standing over my baby now.

“Hey, little baby,” he uttered, but I quickly turned to him, holding my baby tightly against my chest.

“Come on, I’m a good guy,” the moment he said that, my baby stopped crying.

“Look, even he thinks you’re lying,” I scoffed, almost chuckling at him sarcastically.

“He stopped crying because he saw what a handsome man is standing right before his mother, and she’s being rude to him,” he complained, but said it in a childish tone, almost as if talking to Roman.

And then, my baby started laughing. I couldn’t help but feel so happy.

“Look, lie like that. He likes it,” I said, and Rollo frowned at me.

“I am handsome.”

His words prompted another innocent laugh from Roman. This was the first laughter of my child, and I felt so incredibly happy.

“Rollo! He’s laughing,” I put him down on the bassinet and covered my mouth with my hands.

“I know. He’s laughing at me,” Rollo continued to say things that made my son laugh. I just stood there, watching my baby’s perfect smile.

‘Like his father,’ the moment Akira said that, my smile started to fade.

‘Huh! He got nothing from his father. Maybe the looks, but he is no longer his son,’ I don’t know what happened to me, but I snapped at her, ‘And you should stay asleep if you’re going to say bullshit like this again.’

I heard her silence and didn’t bother checking on her. I didn’t even want to apologize. I knew I hadn’t made a mistake. She should know by now that they are my babies, and I never want anyone to call them by their father’s name.

“What happened?” Rollo’s question snapped me back to reality.

“Nothing,” I shrugged, smiling at my baby again.

"I'm really happy you got to be with your babies. I know I sound like a hypocrite now. But I've realized my mistake, Nora. I shouldn't have been so harsh on you." He made me lift my head and watch him admit to his mistakes.

"It's actually easier for men like us to decide what a mother should do or shouldn't do. We don't experience the pain of birth or go through pregnancy, so it's easy for us to say that abortion is the only way. Ugh! I feel disgusted with myself because, Nora, I wouldn't have punished my sister if she had gotten pregnant by someone."

"That is a nice speech," Brody's sudden arrival made us turn and face him. He was staring at Rollo as if he had more to say but was holding back because I was there too.

"I heard it all," Brody kept his eyes on Rollo, his face showing clear displeasure.

"I'm not ashamed of admitting it. It was not my place to decide what she should have done—" Rollo started to explain, but Brody stepped forward to silence him.

"Of course it was our place. Do you not remember the rules of a pack? A she-wolf is not supposed to get pregnant without a mate," Brody confronted him.

“I know the rules, and I do believe they are flawed,” Rollo looked him straight in the eye and repeated himself. He was taking a stand.

That was interesting. I began to wonder how this might benefit me in the long run.

“Thank you, Rollo, for your time here. I would like you to go and check the new weapons in the shed,” Brody stepped aside, gesturing toward the door. Rollo took a deep breath, looked at me, and then walked out of the

I had never seen such a spark in his eyes before. The way he looked at me and then left made me wonder what was going on in his heart.

Was he developing feelings for me?

“You are allowed to comment,” I told Akira, who I had just hurt a minute ago.

“So that you can shut me up if our opinions differ?” She made me roll my eyes and focus on Brody for now. I could deal with her later. We didn’t really hold grudges against each other for long, so I knew I’d be fine.

“Rollo—” Brody cleared his throat, “He has a habit of going after beautiful things. And once he becomes infatuated with them, he loses his mind. The things he said sounded too good to be true, right?” I wondered what Brody was doing. Seriously, was he trying to disregard his Royal Beta’s words?

“No! I expected it from him. I’ve noticed a positive change in him for a while, at least towards me,” I pouted, trying to appear genuinely impressed.

“Really? I think he’s just saying whatever he thinks will get you to sleep with him,” Brody shook his head. When he noticed me narrowing my eyes and paying attention to his words, he added, “But you wouldn’t do it, right? You are only allowed to have the luxury of these your babies whenever you want because you are now known as my wife

It took me by surprise. A Luna with a silver anklet?

“As long as I don’t have to kiss you,” I wrinkled my nose and could tell I hurt his feelings.

“I will never force you into intimacy,” he lied. He had done it before, but I didn’t want to develop that topic further for now.

“Anyway, the Alpha King brothers contacted my Royal Gamma again,” as he said that, my frown deepened. Why couldn’t they leave us alone?

“Again?” I asked, my exhaustion clear on my face.

“They are claiming to need your services,” he shocked me with his words and the news.

“Huh?” I folded my arms over my chest, watching him and waiting for him to explain further.

“Remember that whole fog people thing? It has returned, and now it is slowly spreading across the other packs too. They want your help to find the cause,” he finished, now waiting for my response.

“Who do they think I am? A leaf blower, who will just blow the fog away?” I shrugged, still not understanding what they meant by my services.

“I don’t understand either. But after seeing you fight, everyone agreed and kind of mentioned your name for the rescue of the packs,” he lowered his gaze because it was all his doing that I started fighting the mutants in the first place when I should have been taking care of my babies.

“The pack members who witnessed your fight want you to save them,” he finished, making my frown grow deeper.

“Come sit; we’re discussing an important matter,” Brody patted the space beside him for me to sit. His left side was reserved for Janet, who had swollen eyes, as if she had been crying since he brought me into the main mansion with my babies.

She wore a beautiful white dress, while I had decided to attend this important meeting in a black top and black pants.

“I’m fine here,” I replied with my TERMEN arms crossed.

I didn’t want to sit with these elites. They were too royal for me.

“Come on, you’re my Luna,” Brody insisted, making it awkward for everyone present. Rollo looked away, while Jerry shook his head, visibly disappointed with Brody’s behavior towards me. Rollo, however, seemed jealous.

The old council member cleared his throat, ready to continue discussing the main matter, but Brody turned to answer Janet.

“Anyway,” Rollo straightened his back, trying to stop Janet from continuously belittling me.

“So they want our warrior in their pack for a few days,” Rollo uttered, and my heart sank in my chest. However, I had grown so immune to reactions that I didn’t show any.

“That’s crazy,” Counselor Albert shook his head in disapproval. “She is our asset. Letting her go means stopping the revenue from battles for some time.”

I rolled my eyes, and when I glanced at Brody, I found him looking directly at me.

“That is not why I don’t want her gone,” he quickly adjusted his jacket and corrected the old man. “I just don’t like my Luna going there. They were not very nice to her when she was living there. I wouldn’t want her to go back there again,” he explained, almost choking me with his reasoning.

Everyone watched me as I tried my best to hold back my laughter. The situation was so amusing that I kept breaking character here and there.

“Anyway, I think if it helps us, it should be no problem,” Janet quickly jumped in, seemingly eager to smooth over the discomfort between her mate and me, whom she had only known as a slave until now.

“What are you guys getting from me serving the Alpha King brothers?” I raised an eyebrow because I hadn’t been told that part by Brody.

377—I Guess I Am Going Back

Nora:

Everyone had been trying to convince Brody for hours to let me go, but he refused. They even reminded him of the substantial money he would receive, but his answer remained the same.

I didn't want to bother talking to him. I didn't want to go back myself, so I was hoping he would stay stubborn. Leaving would mean leaving my children behind, and I had no intention of abandoning them to live in a pack where I didn't want to stay a single day more. It was crazy how I had once desperately wanted to live in that pack, but now even the thought of it angered me.

After taking care of my babies, I left the room to see what was happening and found them still gathered in the living room. But this time, there was someone else with them.

"First, you didn't tell my daughter you already had a mate, and now you've disrespected her in front of her?" It was Alpha Hues of the Crimson Hollow Pack.

I should have known Janet would contact her father soon and complain about her mistreatment in the pack. I understood why she had been so nasty to me. Brody had lied to her about already having an accepted mate that he was keeping as a slave. So I understood why she was annoyed. He only told her that I once came here to be accepted by him but things didn't go that far between us and he ended up not accepting me because of my pregnancy.

It surprised me that she still came back after finding out about his lies. But that didn't make Brody appreciate her any more.

"I'm sorry. Our Alpha had already tossed that girl into the servant quarters. It's just that the recent events—where she became such a fighter didn't allow him to reject her. The pack and people who see her as a hero now would not take it well. They rely on her for saving them if the mutants ever decide to enter the population. The fear they once had is pretty much gone, and that is because of her," the Royal Gamma explained the situation to the man, while Brody leaned back in his chair with his thumb under his bottom lip, staring at Janet angrily.

I could tell that Brody was upset with Janet for bringing her father here and confronting Brody.

"Fine, that's the Alphas and their business. All I can do is ask my daughter to come home with me, but she wants to stay here. However, that doesn't mean I'll let him mistreat her," Mr. Hues sounded very annoyed and frustrated.

Of course he would be. The Alpha Brody who had won his heart turned out to be a liar, and now he was giving his daughter a hard time and upsetting her left and right.

"Just let us know what you want us to do to ease your anger," Jerry continued to sound respectful, even though I could tell deep down he probably wanted to yell at Mr. Hues and kick him out.

Brody hadn't said a word, not even an apology to Janet. Rollo was standing behind the couches, staring out the window with his arms folded over his chest.

"I want you to accept the offer from the Alpha Kings and send your warrior, or Luna, or whatever you guys call her, to their pack. If they get upset, all our packs will be in trouble," Mr. Hues muttered, “Let her stay. She is part of this conversation,” Brody straightened his back and patted the empty sofa beside him, making Janet look over at her father, who gave her a reassuring nod.

“It’s either she goes, or the Alpha King brothers will take action against your pack. I received a call from Alpha King Cain today, and he didn’t sound pleased with the performance of our warriors and packs. It was clear to me that he was taking his frustration out on you for not sending her to his pack. He even stated that if the performance didn’t improve, he might have to review the battles we conduct here,” Mr. Hues said. The minute he mentioned my battles, I saw Brody turn his head toward him.

Rollo had finally snapped out of his thoughts and was now looking our way. I was pretty pissed at Cain for doing this. He was now trying to use his power to make me go back home. But why? They kicked me out and wanted me gone. Now that I was gone, he wanted me back?
