Chapter 62: Return To Rose Hills

"Doctor Shant, we have a patient that may require an artificial heart transplant," a nurse reported to Shantelle in her office.

She looked at the nurse and asked,

Artificial? Who is the patient?"

"Briana West," the nurse said, her face forming a sneer.

Shantelle gasped. Briana West's admission only meant one thing; there was an added pressure to push the same patient up to the organ priority list, but was it right? Two other patients with the same body type as her were also in critical care and need of a heart transplant.

It had been over a month since the last threat to her life. Evan was discharged from the hospital two weeks ago and was recuperating in Rose Hills, all while working.

When Keith and Evan suggested she leave Warlington, she seriously considered it, but as the days went by, it felt normal again. Shantelle was back to her routine, with her bodyguards following her around. She and her father hoped there would no longer be a threat to their lives with Peter Haris behind bars. Moreover, it was very difficult to leave the foundation that she had already built in Warlington.

However, with Briana West admitted into the hospital, she wondered if anything would change.

Before Shantelle could think about the possibilities, the hospital president called her into a small conference room. She hurriedly made her way to the meeting room and was surprised to see her father, Doctor Hale, and Doctor Park.

The president of the Warlington Hospital was a part owner and a veteran doctor, Doctor Brian Wester.

"Doctor Shant," Doctor Wester, the CEO, greeted. "Please take a seat."

She greeted everyone. Only Doctor Park did not return her regard. She sat on the vacant seat and gave her father that question mark look, but William was also clueless.

"I have good and bad news," the CEO said."

The bad news is that we have an investor who pulled out of the hospital. It's a loss of funds worth five billion dollars."

"The good news is, we have a new investor.

He is willing to give the hospital ten billion dollars as an initial investment," Doctor

Wester added. "Sadly, however, with the investment offer, it came at a price. They want change in management, particularly in the surgery department."

Shantelle and her father looked at each other before the CEO revealed, "There have been rumors of how Doctor Shant only got her promotion because of Doctor Scott. Thus, the new investor did not think it was wise to keep politics in the hospital."

"That is not right." Doctor Hale was the first one to interrupt. "There was no one else qualified."

"But that's because Doctor Scott only prioritized Doctor Shant in the fellowship training," Doctor Park interfered. "If he gave me a chance, I would have been qualified to be the chief surgeon."

Shantelle's mouth fell open. She pointed out, "You have led no heart transplants and by-pass –

"Again, that's because the opportunity was always given to you," Doctor Park pointed out.

"In any case, the decision is already final," the CEO said. He looked Shantelle and William in the eye, saying, "I regret to inform you that we are letting you both go, Doctor Scott and Doctor Shant."

Doctor Wester gave William a set of documents, saying, "Doctor William Scott, thank you for your service at Warlington Hospital. We are offering you an early retirement benefit, with an accumulated compensation of two million dollars."

Turning to Shantelle, he

you one million dollars as compensation for whatever potential income you may have in staying in this hospital. It is with regret that we have to let you go, but the potential losses are greater should we not accept the terms of the new investor. In Doctor Scott's place, Doctor Hale will be the new Medical Director for surgeries, and Doctor Park will be the new chief surgeon-trainee..."

The rest of the news faded into the air like it meant nothing. Shantelle could not believe ner ears. Her heart was crushed altogether, and tears stung her eyes. As the CEO continued outlining the termination contract's conditions, Shantelle recounted

The rest of the news faded into the air like it meant nothing. Shantelle could not believe her ears. Her heart was crushed altogether, and tears stung her eyes. As the CEO continued outlining the termination contract's conditions, Shantelle recounted how many sleepless nights she spent at the hospital, saving lives.

All those years of practicing at the same hospital and efforts to make a name for the institution were nothing; it meant nothing to them. To the hospital board directors and CEO, they were just employees who could easily be dismissed.

It hurt like hell. To think she meant to grow her career in Warlington, and she considered the staff her second family.

"Do you have any questions?" Doctor Wester asked, his face showing no signs of care.

"Just like that? You are going to let us go just like that?" Shantelle said in anger, her voice breaking in and out. "After all, we have done for this hospital?"

From the corner of her eyes, Shantelle saw how Doctor Park rolled her eyes.

Meanwhile, the CEO exhaled, saying, "We did not let you go just like that. You are compensated – "

"It isn't about the money," Shantelle shot back. "Do you know how many offers I have received from other hospitals? So many, yet I declined those because I whole-heartedly rendered my service to this hospital – "

"Then, now that you are free, you can accept those invitations." The CEO suggested.

"But!" Shantelle rose from her seat in anger. However, her father cut her off.

"Enough, Shanty," William said. "We will not waste our talent for this hospital. We will go elsewhere, somewhere worthy of our skills!"

He ordered, "Sign the contract!"

"But, dad

11

"Sign it! And let's leave this ungrateful facility!" William repeated. 3

In the succeeding days, following the announcement of Shantelle and William's termination at the hospital, Keith's company, Prima MedCare, discontinued his support at Warlingon Hospital.

While Keith had preferred that Shantelle move back to Rose Hills, agreeing with Evan, he also wanted to give her a face. He wanted to send a message that what the hospital did was wrong. However, despite that, Warlington Hospital remained unmoved.

They were firm in letting Shantelle and William go, not even caring to take back their words.

When Evan heard the news, he flew to Warlington again without hesitation. He meant to support her in any way.

In the living room of the Scotts' home, Evan offered to Shantelle.

"I wanted you to go back to Rose Hills, but not in this way, not when they have labeled your promotion as a result of politics. I never wanted your credibility to be affected, "he said. "I'll hire a lawyer to make them pay for what they did."

"Alternatively, I can offer to invest in the hospital," Evan offered. "If that's what will make you feel better. They will certainly take you back if I can offer a higher investment amount, and I will see to it that the CEO is replaced!"

Shantelle looked Evan in the eye. She gasped and asked, "Really? You would do that for me?"

"Why wouldn't I? They will pay for hurting my precious friend," he meant it as a tease, and it worked like a gem for Shantelle wound up smiling.

"Ah, Evan. I don't know what to do with you, " she said while leaning back in her seat.

"Well? What will it be?" he asked.

Just in time, Shantelle's father walked in.

She and William glanced at each other, and he nodded. She nodded back. Before Evan arrived, they had already come to a decision. It was only a matter of revealing it. She turned to Evan and announced, "We have decided... to return to Rose Hills." 'Return to Rose Hills.' 1

'Return to Rose Hills.' 1

The words echoed in his head, making his heart skip a beat. He kept his excitement hidden. Evan nodded calmly, saying, "You won't regret it, Shanty."

"I sure hope so," Shantelle replied.

"Excuse me, I – I need to make a quick phone call," Evan excused himself. He walked out of the Scotts' home and into the driveway. He ordered Miguel to drive him two blocks away, and they pulled over at an empty lot.

From there, Evan stepped out of the car. He looked up at the skies and screamed, "

YESSSSSS!!!!!!!!!!

"Yes!"

While Evan did not like how Shantelle was dismissed from the hospital, he could not help but thank the heavens for the opportunity. To him, it was finally time to take the love of his life home. He felt guilty about being happy that he muttered, "I'm sorry, Shanty, but YES!"

When he returned to the Scotts' home, Shantelle waited by the door. She asked, "That must have been some private phone call, Evan. Did you have to drive away?"

"Oh, um." Evan smiled, answering, "The signal was bad. Really bad."
