Chapter 21 Wild Thoughts

Not only did Jarek receive Tinsley's handshake, he even kissed her hand and asked her to call him by his name, which was so strange. Now, he's asking her to introduce herself when they should be talking business.

Tinsley straightened her back, "President Jarek, you should have done an investigation before you decide to meet with me or didn't you?" She asked with a calm smile that stunned him.

Jarek was taken aback for a few seconds; he never expected that Tinsley would answer his question with her own question, and it made him amused. "No," he replied.

"Why?" Tinsley blurted out unconsciously before she could recollect herself.

She's not even afraid to question him. So courageous. "I don't need to." Jarek finds himself answering and at the same time, liking Tinsley's cute and straightforward manner.

Unlike most women he met in the past, Tinsley was real and the most beautiful. And at the same time different from her two-faced sister, Lillee.

"Why don't you need to? What if white Tigress was an enemy who intended to trick you in order to kill you..."

Before she could finish her words, Jarek suddenly stood up and towered over her, which made her gulp in fright and at the same time excited when his carefully sculpted handsome face moved closer to her face, their nose faintly brushing each other.

"You have such wild thoughts, no wonder you are a good writer. Don't you think building a bestseller writer in order to trick me is actually stupid? And, I have over five guards in this room. Do you think an enemy can do anything?" Besides, he is well-versed in different fights.

"Five bodyguards?" Tinsley stared at him and then around her in disbelief. "You're bluffing." She said, but her eyes widened and she quickly covered her mouth when she recollected herself and the words she had just said.

Jarek chuckled at her cute actions, "You're amusing." He said and sat back nonchalantly.

"You have such a good life tale. From being a famous husband snatcher to a famous bestseller. Your life tale should be a best-selling story if you decide to write about it, no?" Jarek said with amusement.

"Is that a sign of mockery?" Tinsley sneered unhappily.

"No." He uttered.

"You're quite blunt and harsh, President Jarek." Tinsley said calmly.

"And you're straightforward, White Tigress. Oh, the food is here."

Assistant Jacob squinted his eyes at his boss' behavior. Why does it seem Boss was kind of gentle toward this White Tigress? But he didn't put his mind to it at all. After all, what he wanted to say was something more important.

"Boss." Assistant Jacob called anxiously, which made Jarek squint his eyes.

He used his hand to motion assistant Jacob to come closer.

"Boss, someone is trying to hack into the company's data. And that person seems quite good, we couldn't find traces of the person's location." Assistant Jacob whispered in Jarek's ears.

"Hm." Jarek nodded nonchalantly. "You can leave." He said, knowing that his data can't be breached easily. Even if the person is well-versed, the person can't breach the data during this short range he'd use to have lunch with Tinsley.
