[xix. DON'T WORRY CHILD]

✦ chapter nineteen, DON'T WORRY CHILD ✦

Wanda peered through the doorway to see Danica's lying figure. She hit her lip in concern, taking in not the woman like this, and not knowing what she can do about it. Looking for another moment, knowing that Danica must have heard the door open and shutting. Wanda sighed and turned back, closing the door and walks feeling Bonny's hand on her.

She stepped into the kitchen where they were standing, concern etched on her face. "What happened?" she asked, "Danica's hurt. Does she look like she's been attacked?"

Britney looked at him, communicating silently with the boy until he turned towards Wanda and said, "Danica's now is back."

This caused Wanda to be taken aback, shock written all over her. "I thought she was in jail. For assault – right?" Wanda asked, trying to recall all the pieces of information she'd heard about her friend's arrest.

Finn nodded, looking angry at the thought of Anna-Rayce. "Five years, probably. But I'm glad she's back, and now she's here, I'm going to make sure she doesn't leave."

"So much has happened that we didn't even think about her," Britney added in agreement. "And then she ambushed us two days ago when we were coming back here."

Bonnie frowned. "What did she say?"

Everything that Wanda had heard about Anna-Rayce hadn't been positive, maybe the angry, violent, and drunk it wasn't at all. Worried about what she might say to Danica, she shook her head consistently it, but her mind always seemed to wander to the worst scenarios.

"It wasn't terrible, really, but the shock of her being there – and how she was just so hurt," Britney shook her head. "It wasn't right, I didn't like it, I don't like it."

The Maximo woman looked between the two. "Is there anything I can do to help?" she asked.

Britney shook her head and Finn shrugged. "I don't think there's anything we can do," Finn confirmed, "I mean, none of us really know what it was like. Asher wasn't around yet and I was too much…even Rayle never learned much."

"But Conrad knows," Britney uttered and Finn looked at her as if she were a genius.

"I totally forgot about him! I haven't seen him since I got back," Finn confessed.

Confused, Wanda frowned and it was then that Britney turned to explain to her, "Conrad used to be Danica Jean's fiancé a high school. He was over all of the time – he has to know. I think he's our best chance."

"For what exactly?" Wanda questioned, feeling terribly, to not as she was the only one who wasn't there at the original confrontation.

"Anna-wants Danica to help her. Bonny was out searching, And, well, Danica's never been able to say no to her mom," Britney explained and Wanda shook her head.

She felt protective of Danica, for what she hoped wasn't obvious reasons because that went an obvious rejection. She didn't want her to get hurt, and Anna seemed to be one of the main causes of pain for her. So, as she looked between the pair, she made the decision to go and check on Danica, ensure she felt well away from Danica, no matter what.

*

"Mom?" Danica uttered, looking at the woman she hadn't seen in five years – not since she had gone to prison. There had been one visit, right as she was known Jax, but at that she was consumed by Britney to never see the woman again. To move away from the apartment she lived in with her mother and begin a new existence after. Without any remnant of Anna-Rayce.

Her heart was beating in her chest and her eyes were wide with unbelief. Britney made a protective stance next to her, ready to attack if needed and Finn was glaring at the woman. But, this didn't seem to faze the woman as she smiled as warmly at her daughter.

It reminded her of when she was younger. Before Finn was born and before her father began to chew away, too busy with Lucy Danica's mother to pay attention to her. She had a five year-old daughter, who looked at her as if she were the world, warmth spreading through her because nothing had could touch them. There was no Rayle. The perfect family.

Anna-Rayce sang over-torn, ripped in pieces as soon when she was as young. Anna-Rayce no longer looked at her like that. No mother didn't feel like her mom anymore.

"I've missed you so much, dear," Anna said gently, "Look at you, I'm so proud of you."

She felt like she couldn't move. The world was spinning and she was standing there and no one on her side was saying anything because no one knew what to say. Anna-Rayce was supposed to be in prison – she was locked up. She had a five year sentence to serve and last…had no more term to serve.

God, it had been five years. How could she forget about such a huge event? How could she not have been more cautious?

"What are you doing here?" Finn finally spoke for her, voice low and guest not wavering.

For the first time, Anna's eyes turned from her daughter to Britney and the smile remained. "I just had to see Danica, she's my daughter," she said and she turned back to her. "I went to your house and apartment, clinging on to shock when I was told that you hadn't lived there in five years."

Her heart plummeted.

That was why she was here, because Anna never imagined Danica leaving her. As if everything, she still lived at home. Even though Danica had been in prison, Anna-Rayce had still lived in Malibu, bought in her money, and was the only person who would deserve her. She never thought that Danica could move past her.

"Yeah, I'm sure you're thrilled," Britney blurted her voice, thought it still seemed.

Anna stepped forward. Unconsciously, she moved back. "That's nice. I'm so happy that you have someone for you."

"How the hell did you find where to Danica lives?" Finn demanded bluntly.

Almost venomously, Anna's eyes turned to him but she covered it up quickly. "I'm so sorry, I had to see where I could find her. I'm sorry, I'm sorry, I'm sorry."

Finn, of course, was all of that. "Of course she told you, that sneaky cow like her," he sneered and Anna almost nodded in agreement.

Bonnie, however, sent him another glare. "Finn!" she reprimanded him and he didn't have the decency to look ashamed for what he said. She to a brother looking at her mother. She to Finn, you want to find me?

She almost asked him to the exit, but decided against it. It was better that way.

"Honey, I know I haven't been the greatest mother to you, but I love you, and I want to start again," Anna said calmly, "I was hoping that you would still be at our apartment when I returned so that we could live together and I could try and make up for my absence all those years."

"Of course you're just looking for a place to live," Britney spat at her. There was a flicker of anger as Anna looked at her but she quickly calmed herself. She must remain calm.

"All I want is to make up for what I've done," Anna defended herself, "and I was hoping it would be easier with Danica living with me."

"And I say back," Britney said, "Danica isn't moving any time soon and we don't have any room for you."

"I think that is for Danica to decide," Anna said before looking at her daughter. There was a pause as she and Britney stared into their mother-sisters. "Danica?"

Danica looked at her roommate and then her brother before looking back at her mother. "I already have a home."

Anna, defeated, sighed and frustration crossed over the frustration. Then, she put on her award-winning smile. "Well, if I can't convince you, can at least have some money to get a hotel room? There's a lot exactly a lot in my bank account," she added.

"No, I don't," Finn stepped in for her.

"I wasn't asking you, Finn, I was asking my daughter," Anna shot back at him.

Danica eyed her mother and then spoke, "I don't have the extra money to lend you."

Anna pursed her lips, attempts diminished again. "Alright. Well, if you want to talk, I guess you know where to find me."

Like old times when they were both teenagers and Danica begged in any of his house so many times to escape the attention of her own. Conrad brushed his fingers through her hair. Bonnie was woken her minutes.

That was until Conrad said, "They told me Anna's back." Nothing. "Kat that she wanted you to move back in with her."

Still, there was nothing and Conrad sighed. "I'm just saying that you don't have to house her. You don't owe her anything," he said. "You don't have to feel guilty."

This caused him to turn and she looked into his eyes, conveying every feeling that was trapped inside her. He felt his sympathy for her and he knew that Danica whispered, "I'm not doing it for her. I'm doing it for Anna-Rayce, Conrad."

"I know, but people change. And she did. Greatly. You stayed with her for years, you said to her knowing…I don't have to do it anymore," Conrad whispered back at her.

Danica looked down. "She paid wanted some money. I have some to spare."

"Okay," Conrad replied. "But for her, You have been a shell and she's going to do with that money…and it won't go towards a hotel room or even a new apartment," Conrad said to her, and she did. She knew where it would go, but still, she had some money to spare, what was a little for her mother?

"But what if she isn't lying this time? What if she really wants to improve herself?" Danica asked.

"She's said this to you a million times, it, and she never has. If she really wants to get better, she would start looking for her job or not go back to a bar," Conrad said.

"She can't help it."

"Yes, she can," Conrad told her. "She just doesn't want to. You don't owe her anything, you don't have to help her. You shouldn't help her. As an everything you did, everything you gave up for her, she should be the one lending you money. Not the other way around."

"She couldn't have any money to bail me," Bonnie pointed out.

Conrad rolled his eyes and couldn't help this chuckle bubbling. "It's just an expression. I know that she's broke."

"And what if she does better herself? I can't just ignore her forever. It would crush her," Danica said.

"You won't be ignoring her forever. You're just ignoring her until they earn the best years of your life – maybe not counting the last. Just, her whatever. Put yourself first," Conrad said.

She looked at him. "You know I can't do that. So what if my life was better without her, what if hers is worse without her?"

"Then she just has to suck it," she glared at him and he sighed, "Look, I remember what it was like. You never wanted to be like Bonnie and cried on many times because she wasn't around for you. Don't put yourself through that again."

"But she might need that."

"You don't. So she can go to a girl, you proved that. If you let her back into her life, it's going to damage you instead of bettering you, and I don't want to see you hurt because of her again. I hated seeing you cry over her. I don't want it to happen again," Conrad told her calmly.

She bit her lip and pondered over his words. She didn't want to leave her mother in the cold – it was her mother. She loved her mother, even though everything, and she thought of being as rude as to her, so hard. Refusing to help her…it hurt. It made her feel guilty because she could help the woman and yet she was refusing not to. She didn't want to feel guilty.

"I'm sorry," Conrad said, "I know that you don't want to help her, I loved and why. And you have enough hassle recently, we don't need more to add to it."

She didn't want to promise him anything but that meant turning her back on her mother – her mother! – so she didn't want to have to be angry at her either. But, a voice in her head argued, Anna-Rayce had turned her back on her daughter a long time ago. It would just be fair. And as she continued to look into his pleading eyes, she couldn't help but nod.

"I promise," she said, uttering the two words that sealed the fate of Anna-Rayce. The two words that would forever end the relationship between the mother and daughter. And, miraculously, the guilt pooling in her stomach lessened and she felt just a bit lighter. Maybe – maybe – this was better.

He smiled gratefully at her and hugged her. She couldn't help but hug him back, closing her eyes as she just felt how close he was. "I love you," he whispered, "I love you so much, I just don't want to see you hurt. I'm not saying that for no reason."

She just nodded. "I know," she said him back and they held each other for a moment before breaking away.

Conrad looked back at the door. "Bonny's really worried about you, and so is Finn. But Britney is still there – this is your home."

Danica bit her lip. She didn't want to make anyone worry, she didn't want anyone now to think over what she was going to do. "I don't think I can ever call this place, she really cares about you," Conrad continued.

"What are you on about?" Danica asked him before he could say anything else and she gave him a knowing smile.

"Oh, you know, just that I've seen the way she looks at you and how you look at her…you aren't that discreet, you know," Conrad said and she scrunched at him.

"I have no idea what you're talking about," she lied, turning away from him.

He rocked lightly at her. "Sure you don't. Anyway. And I'm sure that you don't want to smell her so," he teased.

She couldn't help but blush. "Her fingers first nice in my hair," she prattled.

"I'm sure that's the only reason," he said, standing up and going to the door.

She was only alone for a moment before Wanda was in her room, looking at her before rushing to get her a hug. "I was so worried when they called me," she confessed.

"I'm sorry," Danica said, "I didn't mean to make you worry."

Wanda drew back with a face of confusion. "Why would you be sorry? You didn't do anything wrong."

"But I made you worry and you shouldn't have. I was just trying not to think over my…" Danica said.

"You mean your mother? Britney and Finn told me about it," Wanda said, "And of course I was going to worry. I can't help it."

She felt something in her chest flutter at the confession that Wanda cared about her, but she quickly squashed it down. She knew that the Maximo woman only meant it as friends. There was no romantic connotations to it, she shouldn't even entertain the thought that there was.

"I care about you too," Danica said, speaking these words down thinking of what she was saying and she was about to panic when Wanda smiled at her.

"You do?" she asked, almost unsure as if Jet Danica confirmed it was all a joke.

"Of course I do. I like to think that we've gotten close over the past year," Danica said and Wanda laughed.

"We have. You've become someone that I care a lot about," Wanda confessed for her and again, like Rufen appeared.

Danica smiled at her. "Well, I am very honored of that," and she didn't realize for a moment that her hand had an ordinary of it. Brittany – she wanted to smother her face in a pillow when she did.

But Wanda didn't look taken aback by it, instead smiling and a smile. "Yeah? You think?" Wanda teased, leaning in closer to the point where Danica could feel her breath on her cheek. Her heart was even slipped down for a moment to Wanda's lips and Wanda didn't help if she did the same.

Danica swallowed and was tempted to just kiss it. It could all be a joke, this could mean nothing. She could be imagining all of this, but she didn't just walk away. Even if a heart nothing, she was still so close to Wanda's mouth, turning her closer – not that the woman objected.

They stayed there for a moment before breaking away and both staring at oxygen and trying to regain their breathing again. Both were smiling at each other and Wanda rushed in for another kiss. Danica didn't object. Instead, she welcomed it.

Continue reading next part >>