

There He Is Again, My Ex-Husband - Chapter 571 In the Hospital

Nina's work on the crew was very heavy today, as well as difficult. After having acted in two scenes, her stomach was hurting more than she could bear. She asked Sylvie to get some painkillers for her. After taking the pills, she continued with her work.

All those years, she got used to the hardships in her life. She took all the pain and suffering by herself and never complained.

Because she knew she was not cared for or loved by anyone, and she had no one to depend on but herself.

In the evening, Cameron had arranged a romantic dinner on the top floor of his house just to surprise Nina.

Last night he was so devastated by her hurtful remarks that he almost jumped out of the building from the top floor, yet he just couldn't get angry with her because she displayed great initiative to find him and had such a pleasant time with him. He wanted to prepare something special for her just to make her happy.

"There is no overnight feud between a couple. This ancient wisdom cannot be more right," he thought to himself.

However, it had been a while since the dinner was delivered, and Nina was still not back from work. Thinking that it might not be convenient to answer phone calls while at work, he sent her several messages but received no reply at all.

As it was getting late, Cameron finally picked up the phone and called her.

Strangely, it was not Nina but Sylvie who answered the call. He heard her voice from the other side of the line, "Mr. Dauster? Is that you?"

"Yes, it's me. Where is Nina?" Out of nowhere, he had this very unsettling feeling about Nina.

“Well, I am sorry but she is asleep now. Could you call back later?” Nina did not save his phone number, but Sylvie instantly deducted that it must be Cameron who was calling. So she asked tentatively, and she was right.

Cameron immediately answered back, “What do you mean by ‘asleep’?”

Sylvie wanted to tell him the truth but she hesitated. Thinking about it for a moment, she finally spilled the truth with a sigh, “I’m sorry but Nina is in hospital now.”

“What happened?” Cameron’s voice sank. He sounded so serious that it gave her chills.

She explained in a hurry, “Her stomach was not very comfortable the whole day. This afternoon when her work was almost done, she passed out. We sent her to the hospital and the doctor examined her and said it was acute gastritis and had her hospitalized.

She was put on an (V and just fell asleep...”

“Give me the address, now!” Saying this, he took his jacket and rushed out of the house. The moment he heard about Nina passing out, his hand trembled because it hurt him too much. He prayed to take the sufferings for her.

“Mr. Dauster, please! Wait a minute!” Sylvie called out on the phone, “Please don’t come here. Nina told me not to let you come to the hospital.”

“She said there were too many people in the hospital and it’s not good for some irrelevant people to see you...” Sylvie could not even hear herself, because she was really intimidated by this man, even when he said nothing at all at the other end of the phone.

Nina specifically asked her not to tell Cameron about her being hospitalized before she fell asleep. Even if he knew, he should never come to the hospital as nobody was supposed to see them together, not to mention being photographed.

Nina then complained about all these years of his absence and his carelessness about her. If he did not care about her then, why would he care about her now? Of course, Sylvie did not convey this message to Cameron because she really did not want to irritate this man.

Sylvie was just a messenger, so even though Cameron got really mad about this thing, he did not lose his temper. He just asked again, "What's the address?"

Sylvie immediately told him the address and the room number. As a matter of fact, Sylvie really supported Cameron and their relationship. She thought that at this moment, he should be at her side.

And even if she wanted to stop him, she could not, as he was so determined that even Nina herself would never stop this man.

As it already had been this way, all she could do is cautiously remind him, "Mr. Dauster, please remember to cover your face, and don't get recognized.

Having said that, she sensed that it was not very proper, so she explained, "Sorry but I did not mean that you should be in the dark or anything. I'm just afraid that getting exposed would influence your normal life "

Cameron was not a celebrity while Nina was one of the top stars. Once he or their relationship got public, he could be hunted down by Nina's fans and all the paparazzi.

"I see. Thank you." Cameron showed consent and thanked Sylvie for her consideration.

After hanging up the phone, Cameron turned to his suitcase and took out a pair of gold-rimmed glasses. When he got to the hospital, he bought a bag of facial masks. After putting on the glass and the facial mask, most of his face was covered up. He felt his identity was well protected now.

Even though he never wanted to hide their relationship, he still considered this necessary. Nina was sick at this moment and he did never want to cause her more trouble.

He thought to himself that if there was any chance that he could be with her, he would be very happy and willing to stand behind her back and remain nameless.

Even though he was wearing the mask, lots of attention was still drawn from the crowd as he was in the elevator. Cameron should have known that he should never wear that gold-rimmed glasses, as this ornament made him look even more outstanding.

He wanted to wear sunglasses in the first place, but he felt that sunglasses in a hospital looked very strange. That is why he chose the gold-rimmed one, yet he still got lots of unwanted attention.

When the elevator got to the third floor, he could not stand anymore, so he got out of there and used the stairs.

When he reached the floor of Nina's hospital room, he saw Sylvie poking out of the door. She waved at him and said, "Mr. Dauster, please hurry up, there is nobody in the corridor now."

When he entered the hospital room, Sylvie glanced over him and said, "Mr. Dauster, do you have to dress up like this? It's so attention-seeking!"

That glasses looked so courtly that they gave him a very sensual touch. Sylvie thought to herself, "How could someone move their eyes off such a handsome face! He really should drop the glasses! "

Cameron explained to her, "I took the stairs." Sylvie was relieved.

Because she was really worried some fan girl in the elevator would follow him directly to Nina's floor and further into her ward.

"How about her now?" Cameron took off his facial mask and went to her bedside, leaned over towards her, and gently took her hand in his.

His fingers were trembling because seeing her like this made his heart hurt.

Sylvie signed and said, "The doctor said she was fine because she was sent to the hospital in time. He gave her a pain-relief and anti-inflammatory infusion and suggested that she better rest in bed in the next two days."

"But I do not think she is willing to rest for now, because she really has a very busy schedule in the film crew," she continued. This was the part that worries her the most. Working as her assistant for years, she knew exactly about Nina, she would slave herself to honor her duty.

Quoting Nina back in the set, "Get me up! I can finish this scene!" Cameron frowned. His voice was with upset and the same amount of care, "On the premise that she is still alive!"

Now it was very clear to him that she did not have plans to continue to breathe. Look at what she had done to herself! And she still did not want to rest!!

There He Is Again, My Ex-Husband - Chapter 572 Taking Care of His Girl

Sylvie said in a hurry, "Yes, Mr. Dauster, you should talk to her about this. Sherlyn and I asked her to have a good rest, but she didn't listen at all."

Cameron glanced at Sylvie and suddenly found her particularly likable as he found that everything she said was pleasant to his ears, especially when she specifically asked him to talk to Nina. He felt that was a great recognition of his existence.

With lips slightly curved with satisfaction, he said, "Please go back and have a rest. I'll just stay here with her."

Sylvie shook her head and said, "That's not appropriate. Later, her doctor and the nurse will come in for ward rounds. If you're here alone with her, they would find it rather strange." She thought about it for a second then continued, "Well then, I'll wait outside. I happen to have some work to do. You stay here with her." Sylvie tried her best to create space for them to be alone.

Cameron instantly understood her intentions so he just said, "thank you." "That is nothing." Sylvie said and then left the ward with her mobile phone.

Nina was still asleep. Cameron gently held her hand and deeply gazed at her even without blinking.

The entertainment industry was not a nice place to stay. Although he had asked Viggo to watch over her over the years, they were not able to control her mind. She worked too hard, and too desperately.

If he could, he hoped she could slow down, take good care of her health, enjoy her life and love him once more.

Nina slept for more than an hour. As she didn't have enough rest in the first place, plus she was tortured by all that acrobatic fighting in the filming and her troubled stomach, she fell deep asleep.

When she woke up, she couldn't even tell where she was for a moment. She was just about to raise her hand to rub her eyes and stretch, only to find that her right hand was held by someone.

As she was moving, that "someone" moved with her.

A pleasant and gentle voice came into her ears, "You up? Are you feeling all right?"

Nina lost all sleep in an instant. The sound was Cameron's.

She was a little upset. Didn't she tell Sylvie before she went to bed, that Cameron should not be allowed to come to the hospital?

Nina didn't want to see Cameron, so she simply closed her eyes, pretending to be asleep. However, the next minute she felt was the lips of that man, suddenly pressed against her lips. She was startled and almost jumped out of her bed.

What was wrong with him? "Nat sleepy anymore?" The man's eyes were filled with an unscrupulous smile. At this moment, she hated his jokes.

He did it on purpose just to warn her not to play tricks. He knew exactly how to deal with her little "tricks".

Nina had been given an anti-inflammatory infusion, so her stomach was just about to get better. Now she just felt that the pain was getting worse. It was probably due to her anger for this man.

Seeing Nina raise her hand to touch her stomach, Cameron's smile suddenly disappeared. He then nervously asked her in a warm voice, "Is your stomach hurting again?"

It was not hurting that much, since she had already survived the most horrible moment in the afternoon. Now, this numb and blunt discomfort was nothing compared to that.

But Nina still made an expression as if she was experiencing unbearable pain. All her body was curled up. She struggled, and words came out of her lips “Cameron, I’ve had this condition for many years, but it has never been this severe. How come I was hospitalized just within a few days after you came back? Have you ever thought about it? I think you know the answer!”

Perhaps he cared about her too much, Cameron forgot for a moment that Nina was an award-winning actress. He believed Nina’s words and blamed himself for making her fall ill from anger; he could not feel more remorse for that. He did not know what to say.

Nina said those harsh remarks on purpose. She never meant to blame Cameron. She knew exactly what her conditions were. She knew she would be in hospital one day, and it was nobody’s fault but her own.

“Sorry.” Cameron apologized in a solemn tone. He looked as if he was in great pain out of guilt. This startled her.

She let go of her hand covering her stomach, then she murmured, “Actually... you...”
He didn’t have to be in such guilty. She was just saying.

“It’s all my fault.” Cameron apologized astringently, “if you don’t want to be with me, I’ll leave when you get well.”

Nina did not know what to say.

At first, she was moved by his apologies, but when he said he would go after she got well, she felt that sensation all of a sudden vanish.

How would she go back to work with him standing aside and watching her?

She turned her back against him angrily. She wanted to tell him to go away right now but before she could say anything, Sylvie knocked at the door outside, “Nina, are you awake? Is it okay for me to come in?”

Nina was so angry that she rolled her eyes. As her assistant, it seemed that she was working for him. What did she think she and Cameron could do in the ward?

Cameron answered, “Please come in.”

Sylvie opened the door and came in. Seeing Nina still lying in bed with her eyes closed, she whispered to Cameron, "Mr. Dauster, the doctor and the nurse are going to come in for ward rounds later. Would you like to take a leave?"

"I think you should." Without waiting for Cameron to respond, Nina on the hospital bed answered without any hesitation.

Sylvie was startled, "Nina, you awake?"

Nina opened her eyes and stared at Sylvie. As she was trying to sit up, a pair of warm hands stretched out behind her and helped her up. Nina had to take it as she had no choice.

After sitting up, she looked at Cameron and said, "Bathroom or outside. You pick one."

She was in a single ward that came with a bathroom.

Cameron did not hesitate to make a choice, "Bathroom then."

He didn't want to leave the ward and he was eager to hear what the doctor said about her condition.

"Whatever," Nina looked away.

Footsteps came from the corridor outside. It should be her attending doctor and the nurse. Cameron got up, went into the bathroom, and closed the bathroom door.

The doctor didn't stay long, but he especially told Nina to have a good rest during these two days. According to the doctor, it was better for her to stop working and rest in bed for a while. Of course, the doctor knew that as an actress, Nina had a very busy and tight schedule, but he needed to be responsible for his patient and only his patient.

As soon as the doctor left, Nina said to Sylvie, "Could you please fill up the discharge formalities for me as soon as possible?"

Just a minute ago, the doctor said that she did not have to be hospitalized in the next two days, but she needed to take her medications on time, stay in bed and have a good rest, and come back for review in a week.

Nina thought that as long as she wasn't at the hospital, there were still chances that she could get back to work.

But she forgot for a moment that there was another "doctor" around her. Cameron, who came out of the bathroom, directly exposed what was in her mind by saying, "Not going to stay in the hospital right? I guess you still want to get back to the crew, right?"

Nina snorted, "It's none of your business."

Cameron knew it was pointless at this time to say anything else to Nina, so he turned to Sylvie and told her, "I agree. You should do that for her."

"Excuse me?" Sylvie was so confused that she asked. Cameron should have helped to convince Nina to stay here and rest. What was in his mind by agreeing for her to leave the hospital?

Perhaps having seen her confusion, Cameron added, "It's more convenient in the hotel. I'll make sure she has the rest that she needs."

So that was what he was thinking about! There were too many people coming and going in the hospital so it was inappropriate for him to constantly be by her side. If she came back to the hotel with him, he could take her to the top floor and be with her 24 hours a day.

Nina was speechless.

There He Is Again, My Ex-Husband - Chapter 573

Fairytales = Lies

Sylvie finally understood Cameron's meaning behind his words, so she nodded with joy, "No problem, I will do that now."

Then she ran out of the room, feeling so relieved because, in this way, Nina would be taken good care of under the protection of Cameron.

“But...” Nina, however, was not that relieved. All of a sudden, she did not want to leave the hospital anymore.

It was a fact that Cameron could not stay here in the hospital, but if she went back to the hotel, things would be worse. She knew Cameron. He seemed to be a gentle and good-tempered man, but as a matter of fact, he was the most stubborn person alive.

If he asked her to rest, she would have no choice but to do exactly what he wanted. Thinking about her situation, she felt pain in her head.

What was worse, Sylvie had turned to his side. She was not listening to her anymore. Nina turned and looked at Cameron, the man who caused all that drama.

He really was bad! Confronting her eyes of discontent and complaints, he said with a cold voice, “You can’t work without your health.” Nina was so pissed off by his remarks that she called him “hypocritic man”.

Nina now got a clear view of this man. Today he was wearing his gold-rimmed glasses, which really gave him an academic touch. But look what he had done! She found that phrase suit him very well.

Cameron walked over and leaned toward her. His arms circled her in his embrace, “If I remember correctly, I helped you with most of your homework in literature, but I never taught you to swear.”

As a student with honor, he figured out what to do to his girl who was bad at learning. What was it? To help her with her schoolwork himself.

In the beginning, Nina’s grades were terrible, but later in the college entrance examination, her general scores were among the best in the art school she applied for, which was worthy of his painstaking guidance.

At this moment, when she heard that he joked with her about this, she clenched her teeth.

How could he!

Even though he helped a little in her schoolwork, then what?

What's worth bragging about?

Though she was really annoyed, she could not help but remember all those days when they were still young and innocent, when they were still so close to each other.

Young love! Maybe too innocent and naive, but you just could never forget.

Love was the most precious and the purest when it was still a simple thing.

When they still had blushes as their fingers touch

Nobody knew what really happened, but their lips naturally came closer and touched, just like years before, when all of their intimate actions were from their heart.

At this very instant, Sylvie came back and ran into this as she pushed the door open.

Her face blushed immediately and she looked away, and closed the door while apologizing, "I'm so sorry. Please go on with what you are doing..."

But what she saw, was as beautiful and elegant as a painting.

These two beautiful human beings, their appearance, and temperament were so surreal that they looked as if they were from a romantic poem of the great Renaissance.

Interrupted, Nina got back to her senses, so she immediately loosened her hand around Cameron's neck and pushed him away.

Cameron stood up and raised his hand to give a gentle touch to the frame of his glasses. By doing this, he tried to calm down his uncontrolled and accelerating heartbeat and his crazy desires for her.

She was not well, he thought, I have to control myself.

Several minutes later, Sylvie came in, and a blush still remained on her face. She was too embarrassed to even look at them, “Nina, the formalities have been completed. Are you ready to leave now?”

Sure, it’s about time. Nina also got a blush. She was afraid that her professionalism was completely ruined by this incident.

Over these years, she has established the image of a pious workaholic, with no desire, no mercy, and no weakness. But as soon as this man came back, they had sex and they hugged and kissed...

She was really worried about her reputation and her authority.

Nina then planned to get out of bed. Cameron pressed her shoulder and asked in a low voice, “Can you walk?” Cameron worried that she was too weak to walk around by herself.

He meant to carry her downstairs.

“Then what? Are you really gonna carry me if I am not able to walk?” Nina asked. Nina found his question ridiculous. It was not her leg that hurt. Of course, she could walk!

As soon as she finished speaking, Cameron had already bent down and taken her into his arms. Nina exclaimed and tried to escape. Seeing this, Sylvie covered her mouth and could not help bursting into laughter.

Nina glared at her, irritated, then slapped Cameron on his shoulder, “put me down! Do you really want me to be in the cover story?”

Sylvie finally realized the situation, so she tried to stop Cameron, “Please don’t carry her like this, Mr. Dauster! If people see her like this, she would be made headline in tomorrow’s entertainment news!”

Cameron put Nina down and asked, “Has the car arrived?”

Sylvie replied, “Yes, it’s already in the parking lot.”

“Then you two can go first.” After Cameron finished speaking, he turned to Nina and said, “Nina, please go back to the top floor after you arrive at the hotel. I’ll take care of you.”

Nina didn’t want to tell him what she wanted to say, she went on her own.

Cameron was not discussing it with her. He was giving orders. According to him, she had to go to the top floor, and even if she did not want to, he would force her to go.

As he was being too bossy, she really did not want to speak with him.

After getting into the elevator, out of curiosity Sylvie asked Nina in a low voice, “Nina, are you really going?”

“No,” Nina answered.

Sylvie sighed, “But Mr. Dauster doesn’t seem to be negotiable on this matter...”

Nina snorted with impatience, “So you notice that? Then why did you ask me about it? Does it seem that I have a choice?” Sylvie pursed his lips and snickered, Was this what they called “Everything has its vanquisher”?

Her boss had been slaughtering all over the world in the entertainment industry in these recent years, and she barely had any relationships with men. However, she just could not get over Cameron, and this man was so special to her that he had her in his hand.

She believed that Nina must still have been in love with him, and that was the reason why she walked willingly into the palm of his hand.

Nina was so tired seeing Sylvie becoming a fan of Cameron, so she coughed lightly and stared at her assistant, “I have something important that I want you to understand.”

Sylvie blinked at her with a very innocent look on her face. Nina said to her, “You are my assistant, not his assistant. All your actions should follow my directions, okay?”

Sylvie instantly understood what she meant. She felt a little bit guilty so she shrugged and said, “Alright, I’m sorry.”

Nina cared about her but her actions were wrong, "You should read less romantic novels and love stories. The stories about Prince and Princess are fake."

She once thought that her love with Cameron was as beautiful as a fairy tale, but it was chopped to pieces by the cruel reality.

There He Is Again, My Ex-Husband - Chapter 574 A Bad Man

Nina went back to the hotel in her MPV, and she went directly to her own room. Why would she listen to him? Why would she go to the top floor as he asked? That's just not her.

Nina was still weak. When she returned to her room, she lay on the bed feebly. Sylvie reminded her, "Nina, your fans are still worried about you. How about sending a tweet for some interactions with them?"

Nina fainted on the scene and this had already been trending for a while. Her fans asked about Nina's situation through Twitter, and they @ Nina's studio for her latest news.

Nina replied, "You are right, and I'll do it later." She said to Sylvie again, "You can go back and call it a day. I'll be fine by myself."

The whole afternoon had been tough for both of them. Moreover, Nina was never dependent on anyone. Sylvie's work was much easier compared to the work waiting for her counterparts. Nina never asked her to do the things that she could complete by herself.

Sylvie handed her over a glass of water and said, "I know I should stay, but Mr. Dauster said he would be here and take care of you... So I guess I'll just go."

Nina took the glass from her hand, and asked her, "does Sherlyn know about you trying this hard to get me together with Mr. Dauster?"

Sherlyn believed that it was not the time for Nina's relationship to go public. Besides, she never had a good impression of Cameron. It was very improper for Sylvie to try to do this.

Sylvie gave her a very serious look and said, "Nina, trust me, there is nothing she wants more than to see you happy."

They have been through too much together, and that had made Sherlyn her best agent of all time, and Sherlyn made her famous too. They did not just work partners. They were friends, and they fought together.

So surely if Nina could have happiness in a relationship, Sherlyn would give her best wishes. Nina knew what she said was right, so she blinked to show agreement, but she still could not believe that Sylvie would be so clear about it. When Cameron called her, Sylvie had already left for a while.

When Nina picked up the phone, she immediately heard his voice from the other side, "When are you coming upstairs?" Nina rolled her eyes and said nothing to his question.

Cameron said, "So you want me to go down and carry you up here, huh?"

Nina snorted with anger, "I just want to stay in my own room, thank you."

Strangely, there was a calmness in Cameron's voice, "If you believe a man walking in and out of your room is ok, then I'm fine with it, too."

Nina insisted for a while, but she finally gave in and started packing up her things. There were other members of the cast living on the same floor with her, so having Cameron going in and out of her room was really not a good idea. It would be much better on the top floor.

As she stepped outside the elevator, she found Cameron already waiting for her, wearing her glasses, talking, and handsome, Nina still could not resist his charm. She got dizzy simply by looking at him.

Before she could say anything, he came over and took her in his arms. Nina screamed and she really could not understand why Cameron liked to carry her this much, and she was not used to it at all.

She thought he had done too much. She was weak, but she still could walk. She was a tough girl all her life, and she could not understand why he thought she was too fragile to walk by herself.

When they got into the room, Cameron put her down. She took one step behind and warned him, "Would you stop doing this? What was the fun in all that carrying me around?"

Cameron did not reply to his question, as she had already been here, and there was time for many other things rather than carrying and hugging.

He turned around and said, "I ordered some soup for you. Come here."

Her stomach was still too fragile to take any solid food. Soup, at this moment, was a perfect choice. He ordered that especially for her on the way from the hospital to the hotel.

Nina smells the delicious soup.

Cameron said, "One thing bad about living in a hotel is that I can't cook."

He was an excellent cook indeed! Nina knew about it a long time ago. Cameron was born into a rich family, but he was never a dandy boy. On the contrary, he was really down to the earth. It was her that had no talent for cooking at all besides making instant noodles.

However, at this moment, Nina still did not want to say anything nice to him, "I could not imagine asking you to cook for me, your majesty. I prefer take-away."

Cameron laughed out loud, "Do you have to speak to me in this way?" Nina hummed and take the bowl of soup and started to sip.

Cameron mocked her way of speaking by saying, "So you finally learned to keep social space? I remember clearly someone used to be sticky all the time just to taste the food I made..."

As she was swallowing down the soup, she almost got choked when hearing what he said.

How could he? But that was true. That person was her. It seemed that he was just able to make all of her favorites. All those delicacies that he served for her were just irresistible.

But what she did not know was that he actually asked someone else about her favorite dishes and specifically learned how to make them. His intention was to bind her by his side.

That was what he was, a doer, not a talker.

At this moment, his phone rang. He walked over to answer the phone. Nina finally found some peace. She just wanted to finish her soup by herself.

When he got a clear view of the caller's ID on her phone, he frowned for a second.

It was Michelle Byrd. He did not want to answer her call at all. Last time he had made it very clear to her, but why did she still keep calling?

But their families were very intimate. He had to consider that by not making the break-up too ugly. So he answered the phone.

Michelle asked her on the phone, "Cameron, do you have time tonight? How about having dinner together?" Cameron directly refused, "Sorry but I think I told you last time, I am not in Riverside City at this moment."

"Oh, yeah..." She acted as if she just recalled that, but she continued to explain her invitation, "Well today I heard from Mr.

And Mrs. Dauster that they are out for travel, so my mom and dad asked me to invite you to our home for dinner, in case you had nothing to eat at home."

“Please pass on my thinks to them,” he replied politely, “But I am not at home. I’m afraid I can’t join you this time.” After saying those words, he wanted to hang up, but all of a sudden, Michelle asked him, “So... are you in Jamelaton?”

That was where Nina’s films were shot. She could not believe that Cameron would follow her all the way to that distant nowhere, so she just asked him.

There He Is Again, My Ex-Husband - Chapter 575 Getting Married

“No,” he answered impatiently.

Michelle seemed to be suspicious about his denial, but she could not come out with something else to say. He hangs up the phone in her silence.

Nina raised her eyebrows. She glanced at him the moment the call turned off and said, “Your childhood sweetheart called? Why don’t you tell her where you are?”

Childhood sweetheart? Where did that come from?

Cameron laughed out loud at her words. What kind of childhood sweetheart was she? Yes, they had been friends as kids, but after he went to school, he soon turned out to be mature and self-disciplined. He never had anything to do with her ever since.

Sure except for some of the gatherings organized by their parents at festivals or holiday parties that he had to attend.

He had no feelings for her, and he seldom spoke to her. To him, they were just acquaintances and that was all. He just could not understand why she still liked him.

Looking at that beautiful but playful eyes in front of him, Cameron really did not know what to do.

“I said no because I do not want to bring you any trouble that could have been avoided in the first place.” Cameron tried to explain to her.

He did not have much experience in dealing with women, but he instinctively felt it was better not to let her know where he was, in case she would cause trouble for Nina. Nina was a public figure. She had to undertake more than others.

Nina sneered at Cameron's words, "You have hijacked me to your room and you are afraid of causing me unnecessary trouble?" "You do understand that if someone takes a photo of us being together, we would..." Nina stopped and pressed her lips together.

What she actually meant was that if she was photographed being in his room for a long time, they had to get married right now to keep her fame intact. But she could never say that in front of him.

Cameron raised his eyebrow, approached her, and asked, "What do we have to do? Go public?"

"As if!" Nina left with diffidence.

Cameron's expectation in his eyes got dim, but he then gathered up his emotions and asked her, "do you want to have another bowl?"

"No, thanks." Nina put down her bowl and turned away again. This time she sank herself into the sofa.

In fact, at this moment, she just wanted to lie down quietly, instead of staying with Cameron in such a nervous mind, for fear of what he would do to her and where she would fall into his trap.

She used to talk about it with Emelia before. She was too tired to be with Cameron. He was too smart for her and that made her strassed out.

Nestled on the sofa, she pinched her forehead and didn't know what to do.

While she was troubled, that man's voice came into her ears, "Have you brought the medicine? It's about time to take your medications."

Nina was not happy about it. There was nothing more hateful for her in the world than taking medications ever since she was a child. And this time the doctors were extra generous about his prescriptions. She felt that she did not need to have her dinner if she really swallowed all that pills.

So she simply ignored Cameron's words and continued to stay on the sofa with her eyes closed.

"I know you don't like those pills, but your body doesn't allow you to be capricious. Knowing that she deliberately ignored him, Cameron simply walked and leaned over to trap her in his arms. His face looked so serious.

Nina responded with an indifferent face even without any concealment. Cameron didn't say anything. At this moment, Nina's mobile phone rang. It was a video call from Emelia.

Having seen Emelia's name on the screen, she immediately pushed away Cameron in front of her. She tried hard to cheer her up and then got connected.

Emelia must have seen the news that she fainted. Nina knew she would be worried sick about her. Nina felt so guilty to have a pregnant woman worrying about her.

"Hi, sweetie!" As soon as she got connected on the line, Nina immediately took out her energetic voice to greet Emelia and tried to show Emelia that she was absolutely fine at this moment.

Emelia didn't buy that. She started yelling with her eyes turning pink from all the worries, "Nina Sanchez, how many times have I told you to take care of yourself no matter what? You made a promise to me, but look what have you done to yourself?"

Emelia saw Nina fainted and was sent to the hospital from the news. She felt she was about to cry.

Julian took his time to calm her down, but now when she got connected with Nina, Emelia felt like she was going to cry again.

She really loved Nina and was really worried about her.

Nina worked too hard when she was still a nobody in those years. In addition, she was not very good at taking care of herself.

Her stomach became fragile and defenseless from irregular eating at that time. Before, she often had stomachaches, but this was the first time she fainted and got hospitalized.

No wonder Emelia was crying.

If it weren't for her pregnancy, Emelia would fly directly to Nina's place in the first place.

Nina saw that Emelia was about to cry, and immediately she tried to comfort her, "Don't worry about me. Look, I am perfectly fine! I am out of the hospital now." "I promise to follow the prescriptions and take my pill timely."

Emelia also knew that Nina did not like taking medicine and often escaped from her daily prescription, so she specifically told her to follow the doctor's orders. Nina did not upset Emelia, so she simply said yes on the phone.

Cameron did not know what to say about it as Nina never listened to him as she listened to Emelia.

She just turned a deaf ear to his words, and she was giving him all those cold faces, but one call from Emelia fixed it all.

Sure enough, it's the best life for a best friend. As soon as Emelia cried, Nina compromised. What did she want him to do then? Crying?

Cameron shook his head, turned around and poured a glass of water for her, and asked her to take her meds in front of the video call with Emelia.

He did not care about who she listened to as long as she take her meds and got well.
He really did not care whether this woman listened to him or not.

Nina glared at a handful of pills handed to her and she clenched her teeth. If Emelia hadn't been watching, she really wanted to shove these pills into Cameron's mouth.

Cameron's figure appeared in the video as he was handing over the pills to Nina. Emelia knew instantly that Cameron was beside Nina at the moment. She was relieved. According to her understanding of Cameron, he really knew how to take care of people.

And as they were saying, there was always one thing that overcomes another. Although Nina looked as if she was arrogant in front of Cameron, this man was always her weak point because she loved him.

Thinking of this, Emelia explained to Cameron in the video, “Hi, Cameron! if she doesn’t want to take the medicine, you can try to feed her mouth to mouth.”

Nina could not believe her ears! Did her bestie really say that? Had she been betrayed by the whole world?

From her close assistant to her best friend, it seemed that there was no one on her side.

There He Is Again, My Ex-Husband - Chapter 576 Gang up on Her

Nina sounded so dramatic that Cameron and the couple on the call burst into muted laughter.

Mortified and annoyed, Nina clenched her teeth and shouted to Emelia on the screen, “Emelia Jones! Aren’t you supposed to be my BFF?”

That was a blatant betrayal!

Emelia laughed so hard that she was tearing up. Nina looked at Julian who’s sitting beside her, and protested, “Julian, have you heard your wife? That was an appalling thing to say!”

“I think she’s right.” Julian defended his wife without any hesitation and added fuel to the fire by saying, “For those naughty girls who have no respect for their health, they just need a lesson from others.”

The overtone was that he was rooting for Cameron’s ways of coping with her.

Julian was very “unhappy” with Nina over her neglect of her body, which had caused her hospitalization and made his dear wife cry.

Ever since her pregnancy, he was careful not to make her drop a single tear.

Irritated by his remark, Nina said indignantly, “The hell with you two. You’re like ganging up on me. I don’t want to speak to you anymore. I’m ending the call.”

With that she ended the video call and threw the pills she's been holding into her mouth. Cameron got her the glass of water before her. Fighting back the urge to throw up, she forced the pills down her throat.

But the choking still made her in such pain that there were tears in her eyes. Cameron sat beside her, threw her into his arms and started patting her back gently and patiently.

Nestling in his arms, the tears caused by the choking began to lose control and run out of her eyes.

She had always hated taking medicine even as a child. She'd always spit it out. Marisa Midgarden had never had any patience with her, so she would have just left her on her own and let her suffer.

As a child, she had never felt love or warmth from the family, which had only been exclusive to her brother Cory.

Cameron had been so loving to her since they had met. She started to think how gentle and patient the man was, and that he was like an embodiment of all the beautiful things in the whole world.

At the very beginning, she was only attracted to his look, but the more she knew him, the more she was smitten by his character and personality.

Feeling his shirt wet, Cameron soon pulled up the woman in his arms and asked worriedly with a frown, "Why are you crying? Are you feeling unwell?"

He thought she was crying so hard because of the medicine. She rose, turning away her face, and said, "I'm gonna take a shower."

She then rushed into the bathroom. With a look at the tear stains on his shirt and the back of the flustered woman, Cameron signed resignedly.

Would it be so hard for her to admit to crying in his arms? Riverside City. After her phone call with Cameron, Michelle hesitated for a while before finally deciding to place a call to her friend.

On the phone, she asked, “Nancy, what would say would happen to a big star like Nina Sanchez, who claims herself to be single, to be pictured hooking up with a man?”

The friend she was speaking to was Nancy Baldwin, who worked in the media, always on the front line of gossips and news, knowing all the dirt in the show business.

Having heard the story, Nancy said bluntly, “She would come under fire for deceiving the gossipy public.” “If her rivals take advantage of the story, she will be in trouble,” added Nancy.

Michelle raised her eyebrow hearing that. Nancy then exclaimed, “Are you talking about Cameron Dauster? Is he the man she’s hooking up with?”

“Yeah,” Michelle admitted with a little resignation. “I met them the other day at a restaurant, and she kissed him in front of me...” She finished her words in a choking voice.

“Screw her!” Nancy said angrily, “How provocative she was being! But hadn’t she broken up with him long before? Did she throw herself at him again as soon as he returned?”

As a close friend of Michelle, Nancy had long known that Michelle had feelings for Cameron and therefore the history between Nina and Cameron.

Michelle said in distress, “I don’t know. I was too furious to think.”

Nancy said forcefully, “You should just expose her bitchy behavior.”

“But I don’t have any substantive evidence. No one is gonna believe it if it only comes out of my mouth. I can be attacked by her fans.” Michelle said, sounding very frustrated.

After thinking for a while, Michelle said, “Actually, I have a guess. He is with her right now.”

As someone who worked for a tabloid newspaper, Nancy's gossipy gene and curiosity were soon aroused by what Michelle had said, "How do you mean?"

Honestly, Michelle said, "Cameron told me that he is not in Riverside City, so I guess he has gone to Jamelaton, where Nina Sanchez's set is."

Nancy asked a little doubtfully, "Does Cameron really like her that much? Been chasing after her since he returned? Or is it because Nina Sanchez is so seductive that he is charmed by her."

Michelle didn't actually like to hear that, because she saw Nina as a shameless and scheming slut who had bewitched Cameron in a shady way, who's only spellbound by her but didn't actually like her that much.

But she still needed Nancy's help now, so she didn't show her displeasure but only said in a self-deprecating way, "Well, who knows? She is a big star with a good-looking face and hot body, it's not weird that he's attracted to her."

She then added, "I just called him and felt him out. He denied that he's in Jamelaton, which I doubted. I mean, just think about it, he doesn't have a secure job right now or any business trips to take, so where else could he be except on Nina Sanchez's set?"

"Besides, wasn't there news about her fainting on the set and being taken to hospital? Even if he wasn't in Jamelaton before, he should have made it there after that."

"Yeah, that makes sense." Nancy agreed with Michelle.

The next second, she suddenly cried to her, "Wow, Michelle, if your guess is right then I may get a scoop and it should be sensational. If Nina Sanchez's boyfriend is disclosed by me then my work performance will look great this year."

"Oh, I gotta tell my colleagues about this, so they will go there and track her." Despite being in the press herself, she was not a front-line journalist. She mainly focused on editing.

For example, when she received pictures from her on-site colleagues, it was her duty to write stories about them, especially eye-catching ones that prompted people to click and view at the first glimpse. I

There He Is Again, My Ex-Husband - Chapter 577 Dare to Marry Me

“If they find something, please let me know,” pleaded Michelle a little sadly. Everything was under Nancy’s control before she knew it.

If it hadn’t been that call through which Michelle gave her the hint, Nancy wouldn’t have paid so much attention to Nina Sanchez, who was in such a remote place with her crew team and no journalist would have been interested in going over there for her.

But Michelle had made herself seem like an outsider, who was only a poor woman hurt by a man.

So Nancy instead sympathized with her, “Don’t worry about it. I will let you know as soon as I get any news.”

But then with a sigh she added, “But if he didn’t feel the same things as you do, you might as well just stop torturing yourself and let him go. A woman like you can go for any men.”

“And he doesn’t even have a real job. His good looks won’t feed him.”

Nancy liked Cameron’s good-looking face and temperament herself, but when she heard that he was unemployed as he returned the country, she found her friend way out of his league. Any women in these days were snobbish. Who’s willing to start from scratch with a penniless man?

Michelle on the other side of the phone, lower her eyes and said, “Maybe the things you will never get are always the best.”

There were some things that Michelle kept to herself, such as she didn’t think of Cameron as worthless, because his character and competence meant he could never be mediocre.

What's more, she loved him so much and was fascinated by the cool and distant quality of him. She believed that her happiness would double if she could ever get and be treasured by a man like him.

A man that blithely kept the others at a distance was only affectionate with her in all ways. The pride and happiness she got from this would be indescribable.

"Then keep silly," Nancy said to Michelle resignedly. The other said no more and the two hung up.

She was quietly trying to figure out the odds of winning her battle for getting Cameron.

She had no idea how Nina and Cameron felt about each other.

What she did know by then was that Cameron's mother didn't like Nina, and that she despised Nina's family background.

Maybe this knowledge would be an edge to her in the competition.

Moreover, Nina's parents and brother were some unbelievable freaks who were as selfish and greedy as man could be.

If her parents did something more foolish, would his mother push him into completely cutting her off?

Mr. and Mrs. Dauster had already landed in Sanya to take their vacation, if when they were enjoying themselves, they were called to come back to deal with some trouble caused by his son, how would they feel?

Nina charged hysterically into the bathroom. After the shower she went straight to the bedroom. Cameron went to bed after her and put his arms around her, while she shut her eyes and pretended to be asleep.

She was sick so she wasn't afraid that he would do anything to her.

Cameron was used to her lukewarm attitude towards him. He was as humble as much as he had been superior to her in the very beginning.

“The book that Emelia wrote about us, should we buy the copyright?” asked Cameron, who had been staring at her and knew she wasn’t asleep.

He himself wanted to do so because it was their story and he didn’t want it to fall into someone else’s hand and be adapted into some lousy show.

As for whether he himself would do the adaptation, that would be something to think about after that.

Nina opened her eyes and derided, “Us? Come on, dude, it is only about me.” Cameron disagreed, “But there is you AND me in every chapter. Besides, isn’t your story our story?”

The story Emelia had written was about a youth romance, in which the couple fell in love with other as student and eventually got married. In her days as a student, all the romantic affairs she had had was with Cameron and he was the hero, how was that not a story about them both?

Nina said frankly and ruthlessly, “It is about you and me in the beginning, but there won’t be you as it unfolds. And there won’t be us in the future.”

“Why won’t there be me? Aren’t we being together with each other now?” After that Cameron got close to her and bit the woman’s soft lips to show his dissatisfaction.

He didn’t like to hear what she had said about not having him in the future.

She had been with him and would be with him.

Ever since the day she said hi to him, she would not be getting away from him the rest of her life.

Nina rolled her eyes and said, “But we aren’t together. I didn’t say yes.”

He had been the one who’d been sticking around her, but she had never made any commitment to him, so they were not in a relationship.

Even if they were, it was only physical.

Of course, he knew that he wasn't her boyfriend in name and all he had had with her so far was forced by him.

Since he didn't say another word, Nina closed her eyes and started to turn her back on him.

The man behind her, however, pinned her down and turned her back. He stared at her, his dark eyes filled with persistence, and said word by word, "Nina Sanchez, do you dare to marry me right now?"

Nina admitted to herself that she was terrified.

Despite all she had gone through in the show business, she was still terrified.

"What? You—" She was so shocked that she stammered and lost her voice as she glared at the handsome man overhead.

He fixed his eyes on her firmly and asked again, "Do you dare?"

When she finally came to herself, she took a deep breath and cried, "No, I do not!"

"I do not, I do not, I do not!" Nina covered her ears with her hands and shouted almost hysterically at him, "Cameron Dauster, are you fucking insane?"

She had just told him that they were not even in a relationship, and then he just asked her to marry him?

They weren't really together, how could they just get married?

Feeling as if she was suffocating, she pushed him away and pulled the quilt over to cover herself and pretended to sleep.

Having seen that coming, Cameron lay next to her and forcefully folded his arms around her along with the quilt.

He declared to her between the quilt, "It's OK you don't dare to do it now. But just so you know, marriage is what I ultimately want from us."

Buried inside the quilt, she was almost feeling suffocating again. Tired of arguments and confrontations, she kept her mouth shut.

He might be insane, but she couldn't just go along with him.

Besides, did he really think of getting married as something that simple? Did he really think he wouldn't have to ask his parent for approval?"

There He Is Again, My Ex-Husband - Chapter 578 Wanna Love Her Well

The next morning, Michelle received a phone call from Nancy.

"Michelle," she said reluctantly, "My colleagues got to Jamelaton last night and saw Cameron this morning coming out of the hotel she stays at."

Nancy paused as if she was worried that Michelle wouldn't be able to take it.

Michelle said calmly, "I'm good. Please go on."

Then she continued, "He went out to buy breakfast, and they said he got some light porridge. Wasn't there news about Nina Sanchez being sent to hospital for stomach pains? I guessed it's probably for her."

"Also, he didn't go to those famous places to get that breakfast. Just think about it, he wouldn't order her breakfast from the hotel, so he probably thought it wasn't good enough. Instead, he went to a small restaurant and according to my colleagues, he paid the owner a large sum to make that custom breakfast for him."

Although Michelle expected to hear something like that, but she still felt a sting through her heart while actually hearing it from her friend. What she hadn't expected was he could be so considerate towards Nina's weak stomach.

Thinking that everything she had imagined him doing for her had come to realize in Nina Sanchez, Michelle pursed her lips dead tight.

"Are you all right, Michelle," asked Nancy worriedly seeing that she had been silent.

"I'm OK..." Despite her answer, there was still a bit noticeable choke in her voice.

Because only if she seemed miserable could she continue to have Nancy working her fingers to the bone to get the news about the couple for her.

Nancy felt sorry for her and consoled, "Well, don't get too upset about this. There are a lot of good guys out there for you."

Without responding to that, Michelle asked instead, "Were they pictured together?"

"No," she answered, "They only get to take the pictures of Cameron. They have not seen her come out of the hotel yet, so there are not pictures of them together. Besides, she seemed to have been off from the set lately and rest in the hotel."

Michelle said certainly, "Now that he showed up at her hotel, I bet that they're staying together away from others. It will be good if there is any picture of that."

Nancy was very embarrassed and said, "As per what my colleagues have known, Nina's team had the all the floors including and beyond the 10th, so it would be so difficult to catch them together."

"OK, I see what you mean," said Michelle resignedly.

It was, for the time being, enough for her to know they were really living at the same hotel.

Seeming to notice her frustration and sadness, her friend soon comforted her, "I'll tell them to see if they can try and take any photos of her, since I won't be able to make any sensations out of just the pictures of Cameron himself."

Michelle whispered, "OK." Nancy didn't end the call before she had comforted her again.

Michelle played around with phone for quite some time, after which she found a number on her contact list and made a call.

Having been watched by Cameron during her break at the hotel for two days, Nina had not stepped out the door of his suite for even once, neither did she dare, for fear that she would be photographed.

She had been considering lately whether to drop out of the dating show, feeling that she was deceiving the producers and her fans because although she and Cameron weren't in a relationship, they were where they were.

But Cameron was with her almost around the clock, so she couldn't call Sherlyn about quitting the show, thinking that if he knew he would think that she was doing it for him.

While in fact, she was only to do it for her own conscience.

Life had been peaceful during her convalescence, when Cameron had taken good care of her and made sure that she ate regularly and took her medication.

She spent most of the time lying on the bed or sofa reading her scripts, while Cameron was busy at something that she had never asked him about.

Normally, people might get curious about what kept someone without a job so busy, but not Nina, who had made up her mind not to make any more contacts with him.

That afternoon, Nina woke up from a long nap when his phone rang.

It was from his mother and he answered it calmly.

He had known that their parents had gone to Sanya on vacation two days before, which he had long hoped for, because they could relax themselves on one hand and his mom could leave him and Nina alone on the other.

He had expected the call to be some routine catching up, but only to find himself being screamed at by his hysterical mother, "Are you in Jamelaton right now? And stay at XX Hotel?" He frowned slightly and attempted to answer her casually, "Yes, how—"

He was to ask her how she knew about that and what was going on, but he was cut out, "Are you on the top floor of the hotel?"

He didn't answer that question immediately for he had realized the magnitude of the matter, and he felt like his mother was downstairs at the hotel...

Sure enough, she yelled, clenching her teeth, "Your dad and I will be right there."

She hung up the phone right after the yelling. Cameron held his phone tightly in his hand, thinking there wasn't anything he couldn't confront and he had never changed how he felt about Nina, so he would just be frank with his mother since she had come to find him.

But what still bothered him was that Nina would get hurt by his mom seeing that she sounded extremely furious on the phone. What's more, how did she know his whereabouts so precisely?

Nina saw his serious face once she came out of her bedroom. As someone who's not obtuse, she raised her eyebrow and asked, "Something going on?"

He walked across to her, held her hands and said calmly, "My parents are coming over and should be taking the lift now." Withdrawing her hands from his palms, she tilted her head with a tease and said, "They are?" With that she went over to the wet bar and poured herself some water to drink, without giving any other response.

He came to her and hugged her from behind. With his chin rested between her neck and her shoulder, "I will tell them how I really feel about you, and I will always feel this way, no matter what."

Although he had made sure she ate well, somehow she looked thinner. It broke his heart every time he felt how slightly-built she was in his arms.

He knew that the little woman had carried so much on her shoulder and he really liked to share some of it with her. He really hoped that he could protect her and cuddle her under his wings, giving her all the love he could offer.

There He Is Again, My Ex-Husband - Chapter 579 Love Each Other All Along

Nina had remained chill the whole time. She gracefully put down her glass after she's through with the water and said, "Just get ready to open the door for your parents."

Their lift should have arrived then.

Cameron gave her a big hug before he went to the door.

And there came the knock when he reached the door. He pursed his lips and opened it.

But to his surprise, the first thing his angry mother did when she entered the door was to slap him in the face. Colleen, his mother, had been a graceful and gentle woman, who and her husband Randall had never hit their son, until then.

His fair and handsome face was soon scarlet with the impression of five fingers, which stirred the fury inside Colleen even more.

She raised her hand and pointed her finger at Cameron, shouting, "Cameron Dauster! Is that the way how your father and I have raised you? We taught you to punch people? Even elders you should have shown some respect to?"

It suddenly hit him after his mother's shouting that his parents had found out about his fight with Dominic and Cory.

But principally speaking, if Dominic was to tell on him, he should have done it right after the fight, when he would have looked more miserable with the visible bruises rather than a few days later.

He didn't do it definitely because he didn't have the guts, but he somehow did days later.

Cameron had known the two to be the kind of guys who would only risk provoking him when they were offered stacks of money for it.

Surely, he had done it because he had never been afraid to be found out by his parents. Soa he raised his eyes upon Colleen and stated emphatically, "They deserved that."

"What..." She was trembling with rage.

God knew how she felt when she was told by Dominic on the phone that her son had hit the father and son. It flashed across her mind to jump into the sea and kill her herself.

She had been a very proud woman her whole life, so she felt humiliated when she was sworn at by Dominic and was called a failure as a parent.

And he insisted on reckoning with her for that and would bring it to the couple's workplace if she failed to satisfy them.

If he did make a scene of it, how was she and her husband going to face the people? After she ended the call, she dropped the vacation and bought a plane ticket right to Jamelaton.

And it was Dominic who told her where his son was. She couldn't believe it when she heard that Cameron was living at the same hotel with Nina Sanchez, for she had never expected her son to love Nina so much and had always thought that he had gotten over her long before.

Colleen was not an impulsive and unreasonable person, but what she had just heard from Cameron rekindled the flames of anger through her, so uncontrollably, she raised her arm to give his face another slap.

"What are you doing?" Nina could no longer sit still as she saw Colleen was to hit him again, so she sprang before him and caught the falling hand.

She didn't mean to meddle in the conflict between them, but she hadn't expected her to hit him and it broke her heart to see the finger marks on his face. What's more, she knew that she could not detach herself from that when she heard that she was hitting him because of Dominic and Cory.

As someone who lived off the fat of the land, Colleen couldn't move her wrist since it had been caught by Nina, who was young and agile.

After struggling for a while, she wrested her hand back and glared at Nina, yelling, "What am I doing? If it wasn't for you—"

She was so fumed that she was out of breath as she got there and began to gasp painfully, unable to utter another word.

Her husband, who was standing behind her, was quick to hold her and pat her on the chest worriedly.

As Nina watched Colleen's troubled face and Randall's frowning look, dejection and helplessness swept over her.

It was she who broke apart the family and made them disgraced.

She bit her lip so hard, trying to recover herself using the pain.

After a while, she looked up, lifting the corners of her mouth and said, "You are right. It is me. This is all my fault."

Cameron, who was by her side, raised his hand and grab her by the arm. “What are you talking about? How is this your fault? I was the one who punched them!”

Nina wiggled her arm out of his grab, without looking at him, continued to say, “I’m the one to blame. Because I seduced your son years ago and then dragged you and your family into this situation now.”

“You won’t have to worry any more, as from today I’ll stop seeing him.”

“But you’ve got to watch your son and don’t let him appear in my face, otherwise I’ll see it as a harassment and call the police.”

“Nina,” Cameron was in a flutter.

She had remained calm throughout her speech, but he felt the resolution and firmness in her tone. When she said she would stop seeing him, she meant it.

Colleen pursed her lips and looked at Nina in amazement. She had never thought that she would have blamed herself for everything or even given such a groveling apology.

Years ago, when she gave Nina the check, the girl was tough and unyielding, and looked like she could fly into a rage any minute. Even these years, despite her beauty, Nina had often been regarded as a tough nut. Yet she just demeaned herself by apologizing like that.

“I’m sorry, it’s all my fault.” Nina ignored the look on any of their face. Not only did she apologize again, she bowed low to Cameron’s parents to demonstrate the seriousness of the apology.

“What do you mean ‘your fault’?” Cameron pulled her over in the middle of her bow, with his eyes bloodshot with either anxiety or heartbreak.

“You have never done anything wrong with us!” Cameron sounded as if he was screaming, “I fell for you the first time I had seen you, so even if you had never made any contact with me, I would have, I would have chased after you until you belonged to me!”

“What?” Colleen and Randall were shocked by him. They had always thought that it was Nina who was running after his son and who made his unemotional man fall in love.

How would it have occurred to her that his son had liked her at the first sight? Colleen almost fainted, unable to take the blow.

Nina was shocked too, and then with her eyes full of tears, she took one last look at Cameron fondly. She smiled, shook her head and ran out of the door, covering her mouth with her hands.

It would never work out.

Even if he had fallen for her first and they had both loved each other all along, it would never work out for them.

There He Is Again, My Ex-Husband - Chapter 580 Threaten with His Life

“Nina!” Cameron soon went after her, but she had already dashed into the lift.

She put her hand on the close button, watched the man coming towards her, and said relentlessly, “Let’s break it there and stop torturing each other, Cameron.”

With that she pressed the button. As the door was closing, his persistent voice entered her ears, “I won’t accept it!” “If you stop seeing me, I will jump off the building!” The man growled hysterically like a caged beast.

“Whatever,” was the cold answer she threw at him the last minute the door closed. Cameron’s face turned pale.

It was too much for Colleen to bear as she heard what her son had said, so she fainted.

No mother could stay calm hearing her son threatening with his own life just to win back a woman.

Cameron was stopped by his mother's collapse from continuing with the pursuit of Nina, and instead went back to the room to attend his mom.

Fortunately, it was only a shock caused by extreme anger and she soon awakened. Randall glared at his son and said angrily and resignedly, "For god's sake, you—"

Why was his son crazily bewitched by the woman?

Randall felt sad for his fainted wife and his lovesick son. He meant to reproach him but couldn't bring himself to do so, so he ended up heaving a deep sigh.

How had they ended up there? They were supposed to be on vacation in Sanya, where he had brought his wife to relax herself.

But she was so furious about the complaint call from Dominic that she immediately flew her way to Jamelaton after their first day there.

He was to stop her, but failed.

Colleen, who recovered from her collapse, leaned on the sofa and looked at her devastated son. She teared up, grieving over her son's craziness about the woman.

After seeing his mom awake, Cameron drooped his head with an apologetic look on his face. "I'm sorry." After all it was his fault to piss off his mother and make her faint.

He knew that they were great parents, who had bathed him in love and care when he was growing up. He was raised in a happy family.

They had never done anything wrong except for disagreeing with him over the matter with Nina.

Colleen took a deep breath and said mournfully, "It's not your fault that you like her or even love her, but why did you give in to your fist?"

She had chilled down a little. Or maybe because it ached her heart to see the dreariness in her son's eyes, she became less harsh on Nina.

"They deserved that," Cameron insisted with a cold look on his face. Colleen nearly passed out again.

He added madly, "You knew what he did to Nina that summer. Now they even ask Nina to pay her brother's loan with the threat of ruining her if she refuses. Such people don't even qualify as parents, so they don't deserve my respect at all!"

Nina was set up by Dominic that time and it was Randall who drove him to the hotel to rescue her, so Randall and Colleen knew what a bag of scums the Sanchez couple was.

Their sympathy for Nina didn't stop them from disliking her because of her family.

"If beating people up is the answer to every situation you get into, then what do we need the police for?" yelled Randall.

Even if they were jerks, he could have let the police deal with them. Why did he have to attack them himself and break that valuable piece of antique?

Cameron retorted emphatically, "There are things that can be resolved by the police, but some will have to be settled in special ways."

A shameless man like Dominic would never learn a lesson until it he was physically hurt.

Randall groaned angrily, "So this is what you get from your special ways? Now they came to us to settle the account, what is your plan?"

Cameron said without any hesitations, "Someone must be behind him." "Then who is this someone?" asked Randall.

With a frosty look on his face, Cameron said earnestly, "It could be Nina's rival or those who are against us being together."

No matter who it was, he determined to find out the person, who manipulated the whole thing behind, not only sabotaging between him and Nina, but also dragging his parents into it.

He raised his eyes and looked at his parents, "I will take care of it." Then he stood up and turned to Colleen, "Let me take you to the hospital and give you a check."

It was only a shock caused by the sudden anger. She was totally fine and how could she possibly be in the mood of a physical checkup? She was preoccupied with Dominic’s threat and what’s with Nina and her son.

Such a mess.

Randall knew his wife enough to say to Cameron, “Just do what mother said. We are not going to the hospital. Let’s go get a room and rest.”

“You could stay at the top floor. There’s another suite next to this room. I have booked the—entire floor.” Cameron was nervous as he said that because in his parent’s eyes, he was unemployed, so they were bound to get mad at the extravagance.

Sure enough, Colleen pressed her chest with her hands and breathed deeply. Apparently, she was pissed, or more precisely, speechless.

Randall soon took Colleen away and went to the other suite on the top floor.

As soon as the two stepped in the room next to Cameron’s, the food he ordered for his parents arrived, when he left to search for Nina.

“Would you look at him?!” Colleen had been looking out for Cameron in her room. She was speechless again as she saw him hurry off and knew that he was definitely going out for Nina.

Nina had just made it so clear that she would call the police if he went to see her again. He’s really that in love with her? At the expense of his dignity?

Randall tried talking sense into her, “Just open up your mind. Now that he likes her, just let him go. Do you really want to see him commit suicide?”

Randall himself was terrified when he heard his son threaten to jump off the building. He used to think of his son as a rational man who wouldn’t do anything reckless, let alone suicide. But his son’s recent behaviors had swayed his judgement.

The only thing he wished then was for Cameron and Nina to have a good ending and live happily together. He was afraid that his heart could no longer bear it if things kept going on like that.
