Chapter 76 Back to the Guest House

Gu Shinian stood beside Liang Zi's bed with Yun Chang in his arms. After the doctor gave Liang Zi first aid, he quickly asked, "Doctor, how is Brother Liang Zi? Is there anything wrong?"

"Are you a family member of the patient?"

The doctor's eyes were full of doubts. Before, he heard that there was only a blind old lady and a teenage girl in the patient's house. This child is not the right number.

"No, Liang Zi and my eldest brother are coworkers. We have met in the mine a few times before."

Gu Shinian's expression was anxious, and he seemed to be worried about his eldest brother and Liang Zi, who was lying on the hospital bed without knowing whether he was alive or dead.

The suspicion in the doctor's eyes faded a little, and while arranging someone to send the patient to the hospital immediately, he replied, "Don't worry, the hospital has arranged it, and we will do our best to rescue the patient..."

In other words, the doctor is not sure whether Liang Zi can survive or not.

Gu Shinian understood the doctor's subtext. Although he didn't know the patient lying on the bed, his heart would be particularly heavy when such a thing happened.

A few minutes later, Gu Shinian hugged Yunshang, followed Liang Zi's stretcher onto the truck, and said before the nurse on board spoke:

"Nurse, my eldest brother was also sent to the city hospital before. I can't open my hands at home. I have to go over and watch my eldest brother."

The nurse still remembered that Gu Shinian said in the tent that his elder brother and the patient lying in the car were co-workers, but they were not suspicious. Seeing that Gu Shinian was going to the hospital to take care of the family members who were injured in the explosion, they hurriedly greeted him. Sit in the truck.

From the big explosion to the present, the city hospital and the military district hospital have successively received more than 100 seriously wounded people who were crushed by houses or picked up from the mines. The nurses in the hospital have long been overwhelmed. Being able to take care of patients with the past will undoubtedly reduce the burden on the medical staff, and the nurses will naturally not object to Gu Shinian following the past.

In the dark, the army green truck galloped towards the city. The soldiers on the road who were under martial law saw the red cross in front of the truck and gave way to the road far away, daring not to delay the rescue time of the seriously wounded.

The snow was getting heavier and heavier. After the car was parked in the hospital, the ground was covered with a thick layer of snow.

Gu Shinian jumped out of the car with Yun Chang in his arms, lowered his head to protect her in his arms, and ran into the brightly lit outpatient department.

The outpatient hall was noisy and crowded with disgraced family members of miners. Gu Shinian walked around in it, quickly found a corner with few people and sat down, touched Yunshang's head, and called her softly.

"...Second brother Gu?"

Yun Chang's energy was low, and after being woken up, she was still a little confused, and her little head wanted to lie down and continue to sleep.

"A-Shang, don't sleep first, slow down, we're ready to go back."

It's still snowing outside, even if the cloud dress is a down jacket, it's easy to catch a cold if you fall asleep outside in this weather.

Yun Chang shook his head, only to realize that the two had returned to the hospital, so he quickly got up from Gu Shinian, rubbed his face, and said:

"Second brother Gu, I'm fine, let's go back quickly."

Neither of them thought that they would be in the hospital for one night. First, the hospital received too many patients who were injured in the big explosion today. The ward was full at once, and even temporary beds were placed in the corridor. One night, I couldn't find a completely safe and quiet place.

The second is that Yunshang is too mentally overdrawn today. Instead of staying in the hospital for one night, it is better to go back to the guest house, close the door and enter the space to rest for a few days.

Gu Shinian rubbed Yun Chang's hands and feet until he was slightly feverish, then hugged Yun Chang and walked out of the hospital.

The weather is getting worse now, and the northwest wind is whistling, blowing large swaths of snowflakes and swirls to the ground.

The pedestrian stepped on it with one foot, and the snow easily covered the instep.

Gu Shinian walked along the path, avoiding patrols and several main streets under martial law. When approaching the destination,

The two found an opportunity to enter the space, changed out of their clothes covered in soot, washed their faces, and then quickly walked towards the guest house.

This time, there was a middle-aged aunt who was on duty behind the counter. Seeing the two of them come in, she questioned her with a serious expression.

Fortunately, Gu Shinian was well-prepared. He had temporarily filled out a blank medical certificate in the space, and now he brought it out with a letter of introduction, which was very bluffing.

When the aunt saw Yun Chang's sleepy eyes, she couldn't open her eyes, and there was no blood on her little face. She didn't know what to think of. She shook her head and said something wrong, and reminded the two of them:

"Little comrade, the investigation on the streets has been strict these two days. If you are all right, don't go out."

Gu Shinian quickly thanked him, took back the letter of introduction and the medical certificate, and was about to go upstairs when the aunt asked again:

"Little comrade, you just came back from the hospital. Have you heard about the big explosion in the coal mine from the miners who were hospitalized? I heard that the explosion was very large. How about the workers who went down the mine? How many people were injured?"

Gu Shinian came back again and whispered across the counter, "Comrade, I also came back late at the hospital to help take care of the injured miner. There were many injured people in the mine. Before I came back, the hospital ward was full. Even the corridors are sleeping with sick people, and I heard that there are still workers in the mine who have not been rescued..."

"These gang of enemy agents who were shot!" The aunt cursed angrily with red eyes.

It has been more than 12 hours since the big explosion, and it is snowing heavily outside. Even if the workers buried in the mine are still breathing, it is estimated that they will be frozen in such bad weather.

The aunt was so angry that she complained to Gu Shinian:

"It's a good day now! We don't have to fight or be oppressed by the capitalists. As long as we work hard, we will have food and wages. We have such a good and stable life, but we have to destroy them. What do the molecules want to do?"

Gu Shinian was silent for a while, and then spoke to the aunt who was gasping for breath, "Comrade, I heard from the mine workers in the hospital that before the explosion, the workers of the No. 1 mine had a conflict, and then they all went to the guild to solve the problem. At that time, the workers who were supposed to go to the mine didn't have time to go down... It is said that the workers who were buried were all workers on duty at night, and there were about 130 people in several mines combined."

These things are also what Gu Shinian heard from several nurses on the way back to the hospital.

At that time, everyone was sighing that if the workers hadn't had conflicts, and hadn't gone to the guild to solve the problem and wasted time, then when the big explosion happened, there would have been at least 600 workers in several mines, plus the workers on shift. people around.

The 600 young and middle-aged people are almost half of the miners in Beishan Coal Mine.

It is conceivable that once all these people have an accident, the production line of Beishan Coal Mine will be completely paralyzed, and once the coal supply is not available, the power plant will be affected, followed by the few large factories in Linyang City...

When Auntie heard this, she felt a little bit of happiness in her heart.
