Chapter 761 Platt Stared At Helen In A Daze

Helen's POV:

I'd always believed in actions over words, so after I signed the contract with Platt, I told him about the work arrangements.

"We've not officially opened yet, Helen. We still have a lot of time, so don't be in a hurry." Platt had always been carefree and low-key sloppy. He had rarely planned anything in his life, and that was why he felt that my plan was unnecessary.

I refuted, "We need to prepare in advance, and draft all the rules and regulations, so that we can avoid any potential risks or challenges in the future. It's always better to be safe than sorry."

That was the motto I lived by.

Convinced by my words, Platt asked, "So what do you think we should do?"

Platt's POV:

When I went out today, I deliberately did not use my crutch to show off my natural charm. I wondered how Helen would react when she finally saw me stand up and walk steadily. However, my leg had not fully recovered yet, and my foot had become sore after standing at the gate of the kindergarten for a long time.

Surprisingly, Helen was 15 minutes late. Since my right leg was not yet fully healed, I had to shift my weight to my other leg. However, it had reached its limit, and I could no longer stand on it.

The teacher knew me as she had seen me with Helen and the twins at the parent-child sports meeting. She advised me to take the children to the car, but I insisted I wait for Helen here.

I was a man of principle. It was already wrong of me to pick up the children without telling Helen. Taking them to my car without her permission was too much.

Helen was still wearing a black suit and black-framed glasses when she arrived. She pretty much looked the same, but something about her felt different.

Chapter 763 Prevent The Children From Meeting Pla

Helen's POV:

Luis and Polly were in the same go-kart with Platt, having a good time. Seeing that, I became really nervous, but somehow Platt was very relaxed. He was even driving with just one hand on the steering wheel, and when he passed by me, he flashed a complacent smile.

"Helen, do you want me to help you with anything?"

"No." I glared at him, taken aback by his vindictiveness.

After playing a couple of rounds, I was so tired and out of breath that I simply stopped playing to watch them. Even after playing with the kids for a long time, it seemed that Platt was not tired at all.

That was when I suddenly saw Luis sitting on Platt's injured leg. Looking at how pale he was, I knew that something was wrong.

I hurriedly asked the kids to get out of the go-kart, and they obeyed, even though they seemed hesitant for a moment.

Chapter 764 It Turned Out To Be A Crush

Helen's POV:

I once heard from Mrs. Blake that Warren was a genius. Though he was only in the ninth grade, he had already finished all his high school courses. Currently, he was reading college-level materials. Perhaps this was why Ruben allowed him to get a day off and play at the extreme sports club.

Ruben had complete faith in Warren, so he allowed the boy to enjoy stuff he liked.

Upon my arrival at the club along with Clare and Warren, the opening ceremony had already begun. There were a lot of people around and it was pretty lively.

Seemingly surprised, Clare whispered, "Helen, look over there! There are so many celebrities. Mr. Thompson is pretty amazing. How did he manage to get them to show up here?"

I stood on tiptoe to get a better look at the inside. Indeed, there were several celebrities present. It didn't seem like the event was the opening ceremony of an extreme outdoor activities arena. To me, it looked like it was a celebrity party and all sorts of fanatics were present at the stadium to meet their idols.

Chapter 765 Luis And Polly Were Mistaken For Platt's Children

Platt's POV.

I finally came upon Helen playing the wind tunnel. Before I could greet her, I saw her run off.

The wind tunnel project was similar to parachuting. This project was as exciting as it was safe.

Players had to adorn protective gear before playing. Professional coaches would guide the players so the possibility of an accident was minimal.

Warren was very curious and wanted to give it a try. But Helen forbade him from attempting it. "I'm afraid you can't try this project because it's much too dangerous for you. I brought you here so I am responsible for your safety. If anything happens to you, Ruben will not spare me."

"Helen, I've learned all the basic skills from this very coach who is here to guide me. So I don't foresee any problems. Let me have a try! Please!" Boys at Warren's age thrived on risk taking and he was surely very persistent.

But Helen refused to grant him permission so she was in a stalemate with him.

Chapter 766 Hate George

Helen's POV.

I had to work late, so I asked Platt to take the children to the law firm instead. As much as I didn't like asking him for favors, I was extremely busy with a certain case.

Jordan, the doctor from Boston, had written an article about my client, the Aziel Bioproducts, questioning the effectiveness of their products and refused to delete it. The article had garnered countless negative attention on the Internet, causing a serious loss to my client.

I made a call to Jordan to learn his side of the story. It turned out that Aziel Bioproducts had tried to bribe him with quite a substantial amount. Unfortunately for them, he turned down the offer.

However, the representatives of the company didn't stop there. They sent people to the hospital where Jordan worked and threatened him. They also found someone to dig up some dirt on him in an effort to destroy his reputation.

Chapter 767 Confess To Helen

Platt's POV:

By the time we arrived at Helen's apartment, the kids finally woke up.

It was like they sensed that I was leaving, so they held my hands and refused to let me go. They wanted to take me inside and share their favorite toys with me.

But due to my current relationship with Helen, I felt that it was inappropriate for me to be at her home this late at night. Thus, I told them, "It's pretty late already, kids. You should go back to your rooms and get some sleep. I'll pick you up at the kindergarten tomorrow. After that, we can all play together. Does that sound good enough for you?"

Fortunately, the kids agreed. Though they were reluctant to let me leave, they bade me farewell before Helen took them into the apartment building.

I waved at them goodbye and watched them enter the elevator before driving away.

I was in a good mood today because I finally resolved that I was in love with Helen. I now knew the reason my heart was acting strangely, so all my irritability disappeared.

Chapter 768 George's Revenge On Jane

Jane's POV:

The company I worked for, Synrad Vision, had regarded Zhester Technology as a fierce competitor. Back when I used to work as the director of the research and development department of Zhester Technology, Synrad Vision spent a large sum of money to steal my innovative new products. After I got fired, they came to me again and invited me to join their company.

I told them that I would join their company as a shareholder and major partner. And now, I had become their boss. Sadly, due to Zhester Technology's overwhelming dominance in the market over the past few years, Synrad Vision was about to go bankrupt.

The technological developments I had made were of the highest caliber in the industry. Under my leadership, Synrad Vision improved by leaps and bounds. But later on, I found out that Zhester Technology had been attacking me behind my back.

Chapter 769 Children Have A Fever

Helen's POV:

Honestly, I knew well that George and I were forced to divorce, and that he only agreed because I gave him an ultimatum. However, after experiencing the pain of losing my mother and raising my children in an entirely new place all by myself, I could not help resenting him a little. I hated him for being too cruel to me. Not only did he blacklist me, he also did not look for me, not even once.

I had been living a tough life for the past few years, working hard to make ends meet. I also had to take care of the kids, which turned me into a very anxious person, and I could not even relax for a moment.

Chapter 770 I Felt Lucky That Platt Was With Me

Helen's POV:

I sat in the car, staring out the window as the storm raged on. I felt both guilty and dejected. All the negative emotions that had been bottled up in my heart were bubbling up to the surface at that moment, devouring me little by little.

The feeling of helplessness and pain reminded me of the night my mother died. I was standing outside the emergency room for what felt like an eternity, and there was nothing I could do but stare at the door and pray that God would show her mercy and save her.

Tonight, I was trapped amidst a storm and couldn't get home in time to stay with my kids. I wasn't even brave enough to keep moving forward. Although Clare had called me again to tell me that they were getting better and already sound asleep, I was still worried about them. They were still quite young and were now sick. Without their dear mother around, they must be so scared.

I felt so powerless. For a moment, I even doubted if it was a mistake that I became their mother.
