Chapter 246

Crystal opened her eyes. The sky was not bright yet, and the curtains were not tightly closed. The gentle moonlight shone through the gaps.

She leaned into Harold's arms, and her heart was beating fast. The two of them had the same scent of shower gel on their bodies. It was hard to tell the smell came from where, and it intertwined and mixed in the air.

Crystal looked up and saw Harold's tall nose. She sighed softly and said in a low voice, "If only you really came to take me away."

She rubbed herself against Harold's chest, hugged his thin waist, closed her eyes, and soon fell asleep.

Danny left the airport. It was dawn and the sun had just risen. The assistant took his suitcase and put it in the trunk. Danny got into the car. The driver asked, "Sir, are you going back to the old manor?"

"No." Danny had just finished a big case, and there was an important meeting at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. He flew back to Fairby from another place overnight. He looked tired after the transit. He rubbed his glabella and said, "Return to the house in the city."

The driver acknowledged, and the car drove very slowly. He wanted Danny to take this opportunity to catch up on her sleep. However, Danny did not feel sleepy at all. She said, "Before I went on a business trip, I asked you to investigate CoCo. Is there any result?"
