Chapter 611

I don't understand what you're saying, Kyle said calmly "He's just a victim."

Harold said. "You can tell Crystal this. She will believe you. I won't"

He started feeling like smoking again, but he would go to see Crystal later. She didn't like the smell of smoke. so he endured it and said, "According to the analysis of the investigation, it can be determined that the center of the fire is the Hays family's house. Do you want to tell me that it was you who set fire and burned your father to death?"

Kyle didn't say anything.

"Let me guess." Harold laughed. "He only needed to set a fire in the drain, but he set the whole Sunshine Village on fire. Why? I can only suspect that the whole Sunshine Village is not clean."

Kyle looked at Harold quietly. His face was soft, and his facial features were so delicate that they even resembled that of a girl's. However, perhaps it was because he was expressionless all year round, the originally soft lines on his face became a little colder. "This is just your guess."

"For you he is just a stranger, but for me, he is my father!" Crystal choked with sobs, "My father is dead, and I can't even cry, can I?!"

Antony pursed his lips and said, "You know that's not what I mean."

Antony had never coaxed anyone in such a low voice in his life. At this moment, he held Crystal in his arms, patted her on the back, and whispered, "Crystal, when my mother passed away, my eldest brother and second brother were also very sad. Like you, I kept crying. I held my mother's coffin and didn't allow them to carry it away and bury it. It was the first time that my eldest brother hit me."

"He said that even if I cried to death in the mourning hall, my mother would never come back."

Crystal almost bit her lips until they bled. Antony forcefully pried open her teeth and said with a frown, "Don't you feel pain? I feel pain by just looking at it."

After that, he rubbed Crystal's head and sighed. "Crystal, have you decided where to bury him?"

Crystal moved. She muttered, "He told me before that he wanted to be buried in Sunshine Village. But now that he died

It was drizzling, and there was a thin layer of fog in the forest. Crystal stood aside and looked as the workers filled up the hole. The urn was buried little by little until it could no longer be seen.

In late July, the wind was piercingly cold, which made Crystal feel cold all over. Harold took off his coat and put it on her. Crystal just stared blankly at the erected tombstone.

There were wild grasses and summer flowers all around. The weather was gloomy. Crystal sent away the most important person in her life here.

Many times later, when she was dressed in black again to send the deceased away, she would think of the low cloud curtain of that day, the cold wind blowing sideways, and the wet and cold smell of fresh soil in the air. That was also the smell of death and separation.

Dan's death made Crystal shut herself up for a long time. During this period, Antony took her to many places to play in order to make her happy. Crystal finally recovered a little bit.

On this day, she had just been sent back from the stable by Antony. When she entered the door, she found that there were guests.

Larry was also there. When he saw Crystal, he raised his eyebrows and said, "The little kid is back."

Crystal also turned her head, revealing a pale face. Even if she had put on makeup, it could be seen that she did not

When Crystal went upstairs, she saw that Harold had already packed up and was sitting by the window. No one knew what he was thinking.

Crystal sat down next to him and asked with a smile, "Why aren't you going down? Larry and the others are waiting for you."

"Have you seen Larina?"

"Yes." Crystal nodded. "She's so beautiful."

Harold suddenly said, "Crystal, come with me to meet someone later."

Confused, Crystal asked, "Who is it?"

Harold said, "Larina's brother, my buddy."

Crystal nodded. "Okay."

Harold said, "No."

Larina sighed. "I didn't either. He didn't even want to see me in my dreams."

As she said this, she bent down and carefully wiped the words "Valeri" on the tombstone. Larry comforted her. "Maybe he just doesn't want us to worry about him. He has always been like this. He is only willing to plan for others and doesn't want to think about himself"

Larina smiled. No one knew if she had heard it or not. She said softly, "You can go back first. I want to stay with my brother for a while."

Larry frowned. "But your body..."

Crystal paused and said, "I'm afraid you won't answer me."

Harold bent down slightly, put her forehead against hers, and said, "Crystal, as long as you ask me, I will tell you"

"It was an old story from many years ago." Harold frowned slightly. "At that time, I stayed in the army. Valeri was our captain. One day, he accepted a very strange task. The specific content couldn't be mentioned, but the final result was that he died, and we also left the army. After many years of silence, I came into contact with the group of people from that year All the clues pointed to the trench in Sunshine Village." Crystal's eyelashes trembled. "Trench?"

At that time, Crystal was still there. Harold was afraid that the other party would do something out of desperation, so he didn't immediately investigate. However, he didn't expect that the other party was particularly cruel and merciless. He burned down the whole Sunshine Village so decisively.

"Crystal," Harold said. "Don't think too much. I've always been by your side."

Crystal pursed her lips and whispered, "But I had a dream last night. I dreamed that you didn't want me anymore. No matter how I cried or begged you, it was useless. You still left."

After all, they had watched Crystal grow up. Mia had already known that Crystal was good-looking, but she hadn't seen Crystal lifting up her bangs for a long time. At this time, she walked down the stairs slowly, and she looked totally different from the young girl who was picking up the rice in the fields.

She was casual, but it made people feel that she was born into a good family. Just looking at her, no one would believe that she was just a country bumpkin two months ago.

"You've finally come out." Debbie said coldly, "It's not easy to see you now."

Crystal said, "It's quite easy for a human to see me. It's hard to say about other things."

It took Debbie two seconds to realize that Crystal was indicating that she was not a human being. She couldn't help but fly into a rage. "How dare you talk back to me!? You think you're all independent now, don't you?"

Crystal picked up her little yellow duck cup, took a sip of water, and said indifferently, "Who do you think you are to lecture me?"

Mia's words reminded Crystal of what happened when she was young. Debbie was seriously ill for some reason. The first thing she did after she recovered was to beat Crystal and insisted that she was ill because of Crystal

It seemed that it had always been like this. As long as anything happened to the Hays family, she would be the one others blamed.

Crystal smiled. "If I were really a curse... What are you going to do about it? Do you want me to pay with my life?"

The two never wanted Crystal to pay with her life. After all, they wanted to get benefits from her. Debbie said, "What do I want your life for? We can't live in Sunshine Village anymore. You should at least arrange a place for us to live, right?"

"What else?" Crystal asked calmly.

Mia thought that Crystal was feeling guilty, so she said, "We will definitely live in City W in the future. Aren't you going to support us? You should be responsible for our daily necessities, right? We don't want to make things difficult for you. Give us 100,000 dollars first."

Upon hearing this, the security guard looked at Crystal hesitantly.

Crystal was expressionless. "I don't know them."

The security guard nodded, waved his hand, and said, "These two people broke into someone's house. Take them away!"

No matter how tough Mia and Debbie were, they were no match for the well-trained security guards. They were soon dragged out, and their shrill screams could be heard far away. Dana couldn't help but scold at the door, "You are really shameless! You kept mentioning you've raised Crystal for a long time. Was Crystal living a human life in your family? You treated her as a free worker for so many years, and you're still unwilling to give up after you get money. Are you planning to be a blood sucker for the rest of your life? Bah!"

Mia's face changed and she said, "What do you know?"
