

Widow 641

Chapter 641

Natalie was stunned. When she looked up, she saw Antony pick Crystal up with a cold expression. Matilda obviously did not expect that Antony would come over. She quickly said, "Ant..."

However, before she could finish her words, Antony had already left with Crystal in his arms.

Natalie stared at Matilda and followed him.

Matilda looked at the backs of the two people in disbelief-what was the relationship between Antony and Crystal?

"Sister." Phyllis came over and whispered, "I just felt that something was wrong. Instructor Evans came here as soon as he was dismissed. I thought he was here to see Dora, but who knew..."

Matilda suppressed her temper and said, "Are you sure that Dora is his younger sister?"

"Of course I'm sure." Phyllis said, "Dora called him brother when he was playing basketball. Many people heard it."

"Then why does he care so much about Crystal?"

Phyllis frowned and said, "Could it be that he had also been seduced by Crystal? This vixen is quite good at hooking up with men."

Crystal said, "Maybe it's because I'm good-looking. The woman working in the canteen always gives me a lot of food."

Antony was speechless.

Sometimes, being pretty was an advantage.

"You can't eat these when you're having a heatstroke, Antony said. "You'll vomit if you see meat. I told your classmate to pack some porridge for you. Go back to the dorm and drink it obediently."

"Oh." Crystal felt wronged.

They happened to meet Phyllis and Matilda along the way. Matilda looked at Crystal, who was lying on Antony's back. She gritted her teeth and squeezed out a smile. "Sorry to trouble you, Antony. This is my student. I should have brought her to see a doctor."

"It's fine." Antony's tone was cold. "I don't know what Crystal did wrong that you set up a rule specially for her."

"...You must be joking." Matilda said, "As an instructor, I treat everyone equally. I only thought that Crystal's movements can be more standard."

Antony frowned. "She's not in good health. Please don't take special care of her in the future."

"Hurry up and eat," Natalie said. "If there's an emergency assembly later, are you going to stand in a military posture with your empty stomach?"

"!" Crystal hurriedly took the lunch box.

Natalie guessed it right. Half an hour later, the urgent gathering whistle rang through the whole base.
Crystal hurried downstairs, and Matilda's face looked even worse than in the daytime.

She looked at Crystal fiercely and said in a cold voice, "What did I say before? You must stand in line in five minutes after the whistle sounded. Look at you, you are so lazy. Do you have any manners?"

The crowd remained silent.

"Of course, most of the students came down within five minutes, but a few of them..." She looked at Crystal's eyes were red and her eyelids were swollen. With a thud, tears fell down again.

"..." Antony said, "I admit that my voice was a little louder just now. Don't cry."

Crystal wiped her tears and said, "It's all your fault!"

Antony was about to lose his temper, but when he saw how aggrieved the little girl was, he restrained his anger and sat down beside Crystal. He took her into his arms and asked, "What did Matilda do to you?"

Crystal choked with sobs and then glared at Antony. "If it weren't for you, would she be so mean to me?"

Antony looked extremely confused. He said, "You can't say that. Didn't she target you from the beginning?"

Crystal nodded. Antony instructed, “Apply a hot towel to your eyes before you sleep. Otherwise, your eyes will be swollen to the point where you won’t be able to open them tomorrow.”

Under the instructions of her brother’s friends, Crystal walked out of Antony’s dormitory. Freud said, “Matilda punished you. Why didn’t you answer back? Why are you afraid of her?”

“... I want credits.” Crystal pursed her lips and said, “If she reports to the school that I failed military training, I won’t have any credits left for military training.”

"That's true. It's so hot these few days." Annette gave Elvira a glass of water that she had yet to drink. "Drink some water."

"Hmm," Elvira replied.

After dinner, they went back to the dormitory. Before they had a good rest, suddenly there was a whistle downstairs. A group of instructors entered the dormitory building together. Natalie looked at them and said, "Prohibited items spot check."

"We don't have any prohibited items in our dormitory, do we?" Annette looked around and found that they didn't even have any hair curler, let alone cigarettes and wine.

"No." Natalie had just taken a shower. She wiped her wet hair and said, "Since there is a spot check, there shouldn't be an emergency gathering. I can have a good sleep."

Soon, someone knocked on the door. The people who came in were all female instructors, and Matilda was one of them.

Crystal hurriedly apologized. "I'm sorry, I'm so sleepy."

Matilda slapped the table. "What kind of attitude is that?"

Crystal frowned. "I didn't do it on purpose."

Another female instructor said, "Tell me clearly how you got this box of medicine."

Crystal's little face wrinkled even more. "I don't know either."

"You don't know?! Did it appear under your pillow out of thin air?" Matilda said sternly, "You'd better be honest with me now. Otherwise, we won't be the ones asking you, but the police!"

"I said I don't know." Crystal said, "If you ask me again, I'll still give you the same answer. There is no problem with my report. Can't this prove it?"

The two of them looked at each other.

Now the problem was that there was no problem with her report.

Matilda said, "If you tell us the truth, we will deal with it lightly. Don't you know how bad this is? Once the matter is exposed, you will be expelled from school and may be sentenced to death, and your whole life will be ruined!"

“You’re really capable now.” Marcus said calmly, “You even have diacetylmorphine.” “It’s not mine!” Crystal said with grievance, “I didn’t know why it was on my bed.”

“Why should I hit you?” Marcus sneered. “I’m just wondering why would there be such a stupid person in the Evans family.”

Marcus was gentle, refined, and polite to others. However, he didn’t even bother to pretend to be polite to Crystal. He directly exposed his nature. “You don’t look like a member of the Evans family at all.”

Crystal retorted, “The DNA test can’t lie, can it?”

After leaving the reception room, a gentle smile appeared on Marcus's face again. He seemed to have subconsciously put on a layer of disguise in front of outsiders. It was not that he was on guard, but it had become a habit for him.

"Sorry to trouble you," he said softly.

"No trouble, no trouble." The staff member quickly said, "Second Young Master... what do you want to do now?"

"I want to see her three roommates. Is it convenient for you?"

"Of course," the staff said, "I take you there right away."

Natalie moved closer to him and blinked his eyes. "But now, I'm the suspect who framed your sister... Shouldn't you interrogate me?"

Marcus narrowed his eyes. "So, are you the one who did it?"

Natalie sat up straight, crossed her arms, and said, "I didn't say that. I'm not that free."

Marcus looked down. "So, you can't provide me with anything useful."

"Hey," Natalie said lazily, "Your sister is much cuter than you. When can you change your weird temper?"
