Chapter 751

"... After being questioned for so long, he only revealed the truth yesterday." Luke stood beside Harold and said in a low voice, "I'm incompetent."

"It has nothing to do with you." Harold's face was particularly cold and indifferent on the late autumn day, like a thin layer of ice condensed from water vapor, sealing up the reality under it, making it difficult for others to pry into his emotions. "It's not easy to get Leo to spill it."

Luke stepped forward and opened the door. It was a garden villa, which was located in a remote place. What attracted others the most was the peace they could get, but it also meant that it was inconvenient for people to go around. There were very few people.

At this time, it was already evening. The setting sun was like blood, dyeing the sky in a dazzling color. The rusty iron gate made a "creak" sound, revealing the withered flowers and plants in the courtyard. The fallen leaves piled up layer by layer, showing the bleakness of autumn.

Chapter 752

Leo deeply remembered the expression on Harold's face.

When he was still the training instructor of team CI 33, he saw Harold at the first sight out of so many outstanding and carefully selected teenagers.

At 17 or 18 years old, it was probably the most flamboyant time. Every young man had his own emotions, but after days of training in the army, they were forced to calm down and become indifferent. Even if they were still sharp, they had learned to restrain themselves. However, Harold was different.

He never knew how to restrain himself. He was like the king of a pack of wolves. He didn't need to hide or be afraid of being spied on, because he had enough power to make all those who had any opinions shut up.

When Leo took over the team, he had heard of such a person. It was said that he came from a very good family and had fallen out with his family, which was why he came to such a place to risk his life. But this person was also born to come to this place to play with his life. In addition to being obedient, he scored full marks on all his other tests. It could be said that he was an extremely sharp knife.

It was because of this that the higher-ups chose him to join team CI 33 despite knowing that Harold was bad at listening to instructions. This was because they wanted to keep such a person in the most important place, hoping that he would be invincible.

Harold smirked as he extinguished the cigarette he had barely taken a puff from on the rough cement ground. He tilted his head slightly and his deep-set features alternated between bright and dark from the blinding white light under the incandescent lamps as if it were ready to tear Leo apart when he looked into Harold's eyes. It added a touch of indescribable terror to the scene.

"I always thought that you're a tough guy."

The man leaned back on the back of the chair, with a faint and fake smile in his eyes. "I didn't expect that it would be so easy to break your ego."

Leo panted and said, "You didn't treat me like a human at all!"

No wonder Leo didn't say anything and no wonder he had been hiding everywhere for eight years but refused to tell the real reason for his betrayal. It was because no one would believe him.

Whether they were angry or fearful about Valeri's death, they would not believe Leo's words. The hero had turned into a demon, and how could Valeri's colleagues accept this? As for the higher-ups, they could only push the blame onto Leo alone. If he died, it would be enough. They could not let more shocking secrets be dug up.

Leo gasped for breath, but he smiled. "This is the truth! Harold, it's been eight years. You know the truth now. Are you satisfied?"

He stared at the man's distinct features and exclaimed frantically, "Your best brother! He's the executioner who sent you all on your way! When he died for you, were you touched? Actually, he intended to take the whole C133 group to die with him from the beginning! He led you to the road to the underworld!"

Leo gritted his teeth. "If the entire C133 was wiped out, I wouldn't have ended up in such a miserable state! In the past eight years, you almost turned the Earth upside down to look for me. Only then did I finally understand what the life of a homeless dog was like. Harold..." He panted and said,

When Harold White walked out of the iron gates of his villa, it was already dusk. It was 9 o'clock in the evening, the busiest and most bustling time in the city. Far in the distance, the traffic on the overpass flowed like a river, neon lights flickered, and the bustling atmosphere of the city overwhelmed the coldness of the basement.

Standing in the cold autumn wind, he took a deep breath and lit a cigarette.

"Do you believe Leo's words?" Luke asked in a low voice.

Harold did not answer the question. He took a drag from his cigarette as the nicotine and tar mixing and rolling through his lungs, but it still couldn't calm the bone-chilling cold. He threw away the cigarette and shoved his hands into his coat pockets, saying, "Let's go back."

Luke didn't say anything more. He went forward to open the door and drove in the direction of Flower Land. When they passed through a downtown area full of shops, Harold suddenly said, "Send Leo away."

"Send him to a place where I will never see him again."

Shine Road was often considered the first impression of City W for outsiders. It was a place of extravagance and luxury, with various high-end brands setting up their shops there. It was always bustling with people, and the atmosphere was filled with the allure of materialism. No matter what time of day, the crowds were always overwhelming, and it was a hub of activity and commerce.

The largest shopping mall in the area was called Star, and it was a favorite destination among wealthy women all year round. It was considered a landmark building of City W, with a massive LED advertising screen that covered an entire wall. Even from a distance, the contents of the screen could be clearly seen. However, due to the high cost of renting the advertising space, only Star's own promotions were typically displayed on the screen. At the moment, the massive screen was completely black, and the bright lights surrounding it made it even more eye-catching.

Crystal silently began to count down. "Three, two, one."

As the screen lit up, instead of an advertisement, a pixelated figure appeared. The figure was wearing black clothing and standing expressionless under a cherry blossom tree, with pink petals falling around him.

Harold smiled and said, "I'll use the rest of my life to respond to you."

Crystal said, "Why are you copying me? But..." She put the cake on the table and said, "Today is your birthday, so I won't argue with you."

She pulled out a chair for Harold to sit down. She cut the cake and said, "Don't look down on this cake. I've done it very carefully. It's just that I don't have any artistic cells, and I don't know how to decorate it... But I'm sure it's delicious."

The girl put her palms together and looked at him with sparkling eyes. "Well, it's time for you to blow out the candles. Before you blow out the candles, you have to make a wish first... do you have any wishes?" Harold said, "I've already obtained everything I want."

Crystal couldn't help but laugh. "Have you already gotten what you want? Please help me make a wish. I have a lot of wishes."

She said seriously, "You can just wish that Crystal, the best person in the worlds, will be around to celebrate your birthday with you."

When Harold put Crystal on the soft bed, her heart beat very fast.

The sheets were changed yesterday, and she liked the color very much. Crystal was trapped in the fluffy quilt, and she could see the man's obscure eyes when she looked up.

It was a very familiar look.

Like a wild beast in the jungle, he saw a delicious and weak prey.

"I've been making that cake for a long time." Crystal looked away, but she didn't know that her ears, cheeks, and neck were stained with a layer of rouge under the watery moonlight. She was surprisingly beautiful.

Harold kissed her on the tip of her nose and said, "Ask Dana to put it away later and we'll eat it tomorrow."

The next day, Crystal was awakened by the constant ringing of her phone. She tried to muffle the sound by covering her ears with a pillow, but she soon realized that it was as bad as having an earworm, as the sound still managed to slip through any gaps and penetrate her ears.

Crystal threw the pillow away irritably. When she touched her phone, she saw that her b*stard brother, Anthony, who called her early in the morning.

Crystal was even more irritable. She lay prone on the bed and answered the phone. "Why did you wake me up early in the morning? Do you know..."

"Early in the morning?" Antony sneered. "Crystal, why don't you look at the time?"

Crystal narrowed her eyes and took a closer look. She saw several big numbers on the phone screen.

Antony asked suspiciously, "That's it?"

Crystal replied, "That's it."

It was just that she was the gift that had been unwrapped.

Antony scolded, "Could it be that Harold isn't very good at that aspect?" Even he was able to hold back his desires?

For a moment, Crystal didn't know whether she wanted Harold to be capable or not.

"In that case, I'll hang up first." Antony stood up, wiped the sweat on his neck with a white towel, and said, "Those b*stards are asking me to play basketball"

Crystal answered weakly, threw the phone aside, and was about to go back to sleep. However, there was a steady sound of footsteps, and Harold appeared at the door of the bedroom.

At this time, he was putting on airs. He was wearing a loose and comfortable beige home-neck suit and loose gray sportswear, which made him look more relaxed and lazy than usual.

"Let's go eat." Harold walked to the side of the bed and watched as the person in the quilt moved. She didn't get up, but wrapped herself tightly in the quilt, looking like a spring roll.
