

Wife Mask 311

Chapter: 311

Trinity's eyes lit up, ambition blazing beneath the surface. She could already picture it—the applause, the admiration, the victory. That vision didn't feel far away. Elliana's time at the top was ticking down fast.

Right at that moment, the sound of music rose and swept through the venue.

On the stage, the emcee appeared with a microphone in hand, his voice booming through the hall. "Ladies and gentlemen, the time has come! Please welcome today's hero and heroine!"

As the final word echoed, the grand doors swung open with perfect timing.

Little girls in white scattered rose petals across the carpet, clearing the way for Hester and Boris as they walked forward arm in arm.

Chapter: 312

"They didn't just look the part—they actually fell in love on their own. This isn't just an arrangement. It's the real deal."

With a confident smile, Boris took the mic from the emcee, his eyes sweeping across the room. "Thank you all for being here tonight, to witness this moment of joy with us..."

The crowd responded with spirited applause, their cheers echoing beneath the ornate ceiling.

Standing closest to the stage, the Sampsons and Craigs basked in the spotlight, their faces glowing with pride as they took in the applause and adoration surrounding the couple.

Trinity made her way toward the front, carefully guiding Bonnie to the edge of the stage.

Chapter: 313

Without warning, the scene jumped to a gritty clip of a busy street corner. Hailee stood alone, waiting by the curb.

Unlike the earlier footage, this clip had the grainy quality of a surveillance camera—likely taken from a_ nearby storefront, not filmed with any intent to impress.

As the view lingered, the voiceover returned. "But everything changed the moment she was swept into a carefully orchestrated setup, one that would alter the course of her life significantly."

A ripple of confusion stirred through the room. How did someone unknown to the most like Hailee end up being the leading figure in the love story video of Boris and Hester?

Before anyone could voice their questions, a black car shot across the screen, barreling toward Hailee.

Chapter: 314

Inside the banquet hall, not a single guest remained untouched by what they saw. Eyes welled up the moment Hailee appeared on screen, scarfing down a piece of bread while dashing between jobs, too rushed to sit, too tired to care.

A collective hush fell over the room when the footage showed Hailee rolling up her sleeve at a blood bank—again and again -just to cover Boris's medical bills.

And by the time Hailee softly told the doctor she was willing to give up a kidney for Boris, an unmistakable tension gripped the crowd. Fists clenched. Jaws tightened.

Chapter: 315

That single question breached the dam, unleashing a torrent as guests bombarded the Craig and Sampson families with accusations.

"Explain yourselves! Did Boris truly conspire with Dunn and Hester to defraud Hailee?"

"The evidence clearly shows Boris fabricating illness at Skyflower Hospital, with medical staff complicit in the deception. Mr. Sampson, as chairman, don't you owe society an explanation?"

"Precisely! Healthcare professionals should embody compassion, not assist wealthy manipulators in deceiving innocent souls. How can anyone ever trust Skyflower Hospital again?"

The crowd encircled the Craig and Sampson families, hemming them in, hurling questions with relentless intensity.

Chapter: 316

Murray swiftly jumped in. "Please understand, Skyflower Hospital maintains an impeccable reputation. No medical professional of such disreputable character as depicted would ever serve at our institution. Patients seeking care at Skyflower will always receive treatment aligned with the highest ethical standards."

The orchestrated performance from both families gradually quieted the room's suspicious murmurs. Whispered conversations replaced outright accusations.

Trinity clutched Norwood's sleeve, her voice barely audible, "Dad, proceed with the engagement ceremony immediately and move past this disruption. Regardless of what truly happened, let's complete the engagement first and = address complications afterward."

Norwood nodded tersely and moved to ascend the stage, intending to announce that the ceremony would resume.

At that precise moment, a voice cut through the tense atmosphere, "Skyflower Hospital serves countless patients daily. This concerns numerous lives and cannot be dismissed so casually. A thorough investigation is essential."

Chapter: 317

Hailee, a good half-head taller than Hester, blazed before the crowd like living flame-while Hester's white dress made her seem pale and wan.

The earlier fear had left Hester's hair tousled and her composure in tatters.

By contrast, Hailee stood transformed: serene, frigid, and razor-sharp, regarding Hester without a word as though she were a queen observing a trembling jester.

Fury boiled in Hester's chest. "Hailee, you wretch!" she shouted. "How dare you ruin my engagement celebration? Have you forgotten your place?" In her world, commoners existed only to endure abuse in silence, and now this low life was daring to disgrace her at her own party.

Hester's hand shot up, poised to strike Hailee until the glitter of Hailee's Rosa gown and jewels caught her eye. This ordinary girl had poured all her savings into Boris's cruel game, so how had she suddenly acquired Luxury brands? A hidden benefactor, no doubt. Only that could explain Hailee's audacity.

Chapter: 318

Hailee let out a sharp laugh, half-amused, half—disgusted, and started to give the check back.

That wiped the fake charm right off Trinity's face. Her expression darkened as she leaned in, voice low and biting. "You think you can mess with the Craigs? You're a nobody. You've got no power. What makes you think you stand a chance?"

The threat slammed into Hailee. Her whole body stiffened, and her stare went cold.

But Trinity didn't stop. Her voice dipped even lower, each word heavy with warning. "Maybe you're not scared of what we could do to you. Fine. But what about your father?"

At that, something shifted in Hailee's expression. The mention of her dad hit the nerve Trinity was aiming for.

Chapter: 319

A bright welt bloomed across Dunn's cheek, proof Hailee didn't pull back.

Everyone froze. The air felt thick as they stared at Hailee, wide-eyed. She was fearless. But did she even realize the mess she'd just walked into?

Hailee didn't blink. With a smirk that could freeze blood, she tossed the check right at his face and shouted, "Crawl back to whatever hole you came from!"

The crowd was stunned. Even five million bucks couldn't sway Hailee. Her grit and backbone left everyone in awe. She'd clearly been mistreated—hurt so bad that no amount of cash or perks could buy her silence.

Then, a voice cut through the crowd, demanding justice. "Hailee, talk to us. We're all here to back you up."

Chapter: 320

The crowd's faces twisted with rage. Sure, plenty in this high-society crowd looked down on regular folks and wouldn't be caught dead hanging with them. But stooping so low as to trick someone into donating an organ? That was a bridge too far. At least they had some respect for human life.

In a flash, the crowd backed away from the Craig and Sampson families, like they were radioactive. These two families were monsters-what else might they have done to the people around them? Who'd risk getting cozy with that kind of crew?

The Craig and Sampson families were left red-faced, their pride in tatters. Just minutes ago, they were the toast of the town. Now? They were the villains everyone shunned. If this scandal kept snowballing, their businesses would take a nosedive.

In a last-ditch effort, Joslyn tore into Hailee. "You snake! Couldn't snag Boris, so you crash this engagement party to make a scene. We offered you money to walk away, but you got greedy. Don't cry when I rip off your mask and show everyone who you really are!"

Joslyn's misleading words sent ripples of confusion through the crowd.