

Chapter 502 Dylan Bore The Full Blame Alone

Dylan had set the bucket packed with sewage above the restroom door, then slipped out of sight and readied his phone to capture the moment.

Dylan waited for movement, and the instant the door opened, he quickly pressed record.

As the scene unfolded on his screen, he started to sense that something had gone wrong. There should have been only Lilah inside, so how did several people suddenly come out?

Trinity and Mindy emerged first, drenched in reeking sewage and looking like two pitiful rats dragged from the gutter. Dylan failed to recognize them, but once more of their crew came stumbling behind, he realized with horror that he had soaked the wrong people.

Confusion filled his mind as he tried to make sense of the disaster. He shoved his phone into his pocket and hurried over, panic rising inside him.

Trinity and her crew were hacking and gagging too much to notice Dylan approaching.

It wasn't until Dylan drew closer that he finally recognized Trinity and Mindy, leaving him stunned. "T-Trinity, M-Mindy, why are you the ones here?"

Filth covered Trinity from head to toe, with her makeup smeared into a mess. Having swallowed several gulps of sewage, she was so exhausted from vomiting that she fainted.

Mindy collapsed too, falling just seconds after Trinity.

Although the rest hadn't been hit as badly, their faces had turned gray, and they kept retching as if they were sick strays.

Between bouts of vomiting, one fixed Dylan with a glare and asked,

"What the hell, man? Wasn't Lilah your target? How did you end up drenching us?"

Dylan blinked at the chaos around him, his voice trembling as he exclaimed, "I'm not sure what's going on!"

"Don't give us that! After Lilah walked in, you locked the door behind her. There's no way she could've slipped past you unless you let her out! You tricked us here and dumped sewage on us. You've messed with us, Dylan! Trinity's never going to forgive you!"

"I swear, it's not what you think! I honestly don't know what just happened! You have to trust me!" Dylan hastily said, desperation in his voice.

Elliana had been hanging back, watching the mess unfold. Masking her glee, she walked over, pretending to be shocked. "Oh my! How on earth did this happen? Should I call an ambulance?"

The sight of Elliana untouched and standing tall left Dylan dumbfounded. It made him wonder if she could somehow walk through walls. What other explanation was there when he knew he'd locked her inside the restroom?

"She can't make that call!" one of Trinity's crew blurted out, clutching their stomach. "We can't let this get out."

Trinity still wanted to be crowned the Campus Beauty. News about her getting soaked in sewage on the very first day would destroy her reputation completely, and no amount of beauty would help her win the title after that.

Realizing just how serious things had become, Dylan shouted at Elliana, "Do not call for help!"

Elliana only blinked at him, feigning innocence. "It's too late. I already called. The ambulance is on its way. Dylan, why do you not seem worried about your friends when they look so sick?"

Dylan fumbled for words to explain and snapped in frustration, "This has nothing to do with you! Get out of here and call off the ambulance!"

At that very moment, loud sirens echoed from downstairs, leaving no doubt that help had arrived.

Given that the affiliated hospital was right next to Ublento Medical University, it barely took any time for the emergency crew to show up.

Medical personnel rushed to the scene, trailed by a swarm of curious students and teachers who followed the commotion.

Shocked gasps filled the hallway as everyone caught sight of the disaster.

Ignoring the foul smell, the medical personnel focused on helping Trinity and the others, while students eager for gossip whipped out their phones to snap pictures and take videos, spreading the drama on the school forum almost instantly.

The incident stirred up a storm of chatter and outrage across the Ublento Medical University.

When school leaders learned what happened, they were furious and insisted on a full investigation. In the end, Trinity and her crew were sent to the hospital, and Dylan got expelled for pulling the prank.

Never before had anyone been kicked out of the university on their very first day.

Dylan's father had donated an entire building just so Dylan could enroll after his bad test scores, but none of it made any difference now.

Even though Trinity had come up with the idea and ordered Dylan to carry it out, he did not dare reveal her involvement. He simply took all the blame himself.

Elliana stayed calm and indifferent while the chaos unfolded. After everything had settled down, she joined the rest of the students and quietly slipped away from the scene.

Chatter and laughter filled the campus as people discussed the wild event, but Elliana walked away by herself, secretly delighted.

She spotted Cole's Rolls-Royce Phantom parked by the school gate as soon as she reached the entrance. Was he planning to pick up Wanda? Trying so hard to play the devoted fiancé, wasn't he?

A sharp wave of jealousy struck Elliana, so she marched straight over, yanked open Cole's car door, and climbed right in.

Our ads aim to provide better support for authors.

 I want no ads >