

Chapter 518 Two Stunning Women

People always noticed girls who were exceptionally attractive, and Elliana and Adah had gotten used to that sort of attention for quite some time.

Elliana leaned in with a suggestion. "Why don't we grab a private room?"

A playful smile appeared on Adah's face. "It's just the two of us. What fun can we have in a private room? I'd rather stay out here in the hall. It feels more lively."

Thinking it over, Elliana realized Adah had a point. The two of them slipped into a booth instead. They sipped their drinks and chatted while keeping an eye on the stage performers.

At one point, Adah nudged Elliana's arm. "How about we get up there and dance? The people on stage look so stiff. They're making it boring. Let's show them how it's done."

A quick look at the stage left Elliana feeling unsure, but Adah was not going to let her say no. She tugged Elliana straight toward the stage.

They had already drawn glances from several tables, and now that they were under the bright lights, everyone in the hall turned to stare.

Barely a moment passed before the music kicked in. An intense beat filled the air, and dancers on stage began to move along with the rhythm.

At first, Elliana and Adah were not alone in wanting to dance to that song, but the moment they started, everyone else stepped off the stage.

Competing with Elliana and Adah proved impossible, even though neither of them had any formal dance training. Their natural ability stood out right away. They often danced for fun. Every movement they made was smooth and graceful, and they developed a style all their own.

Once they started, the whole room seemed to light up with excitement. Adah moved like fire, while Elliana was as smooth as drifting snow, and the crowd was immediately drawn in.

"Wow, look at them! They're gorgeous!"

"I can't believe how well they dance! Are they actually professionals?"

"I scout for talent, and I want them in show business!"

Cheers and whistles filled the hall, getting louder by the second.

Neither Elliana nor Adah expected that dancing on a whim would spark so much energy in the room. The news of their presence quickly spread all over the building.

"Did you hear? Two stunning women just showed up at Nightfall. They're even prettier than those celebrities!"

"Looks aren't their only strength. Their dancing is unbelievable. Even the best clubs don't have moves like that!"

"Nobody seems to know who those two lovely women are. I have already tried asking around, but nobody can say they recognize them."

The news had people leaving their private rooms and rushing to the first-floor hall just to catch a glimpse of the two beauties.

Very quickly, the news spread and reached Cole's private room.

Manley, always one to look for something interesting, grew curious as soon as he heard the commotion and eagerly spoke up. "Cole, Allan, Merlin, let's go see the beauties on the first floor!"

Even with the suggestion, they did not show any interest.

Cole stayed where he was, appearing lost in his own thoughts. Earlier today, a breathtakingly beautiful woman had unexpectedly appeared in his car. In his mind, no one downstairs could possibly be more stunning than the woman he'd met before.

Merlin turned and looked at Hailee, who was sitting quietly beside him and seemed just as uninterested. He thought to himself that the best girl was already next to him, so there was no reason to look anywhere else.

Noticing the others' lack of excitement, Manley turned his attention to Allan.

Allan just replied, "What's the point? It's not like we haven't seen gorgeous women before."

The meaning behind Allan's words was clear to Manley. He knew Allan was thinking of that unforgettable girl they'd spotted in Podgend—the one in the red leather jacket and long, wavy hair. Allan had been smitten from that single glance and had missed her ever since.

Not long ago, Allan had even traveled back there, searching for several days. Still, he found no clue or mention of her. Since returning, he had felt restless and disappointed.

When the others were not interested, Manley's excitement faded. If nobody wanted to join him, joining the crowd himself no longer sounded appealing.

So, Manley picked up the remote and turned on the big screen in their private room. "If none of you want to head downstairs, let's just watch the live stream here."

Every private room at Nightfall came with a large screen. Guests could watch the first-floor hall's performances, filmed from every angle by professional cameramen, almost like watching a television gala.

After Manley pressed a button, the screen switched to a clear view of the first-floor stage.

Elliana's and Adah's dancing figures came alive, along with cheers and excitement from the crowd.

"Oh my gosh!" Manley suddenly gasped, reaching out to tap Allan's leg. "Allan, look at the screen! Isn't that the girl with curls you've been thinking about?"

Allan stiffened for a beat before snapping his head to the screen, eyes glued to Adah and unable to look away.

Manley kept pointing, getting more and more excited. "Check it out! The one in the white dress is the other beauty we've met in Podgend! Ha-ha!"

Our ads aim to provide better support for authors.

 I want no ads >