

Chapter 599 Let's Get To The Important Matter

"Quickly, go tell my parents that Ms. Marsh has arrived!" Charles exclaimed, his voice bubbling with excitement as he instructed the butler, certain that the pretty girl standing before him was Elliana. "And inform Barbara too. She never stops talking about her dear Elliana. Now that Elliana is finally here, she'll be over the moon!"

"Yes, Mr. Henderson!" the butler replied, hurrying upstairs to spread the news.

Charles approached Elliana with such excitement that he stuttered, "Ms. Marsh, you..."

Elliana caught his thought before he could finish. With a soft smile, she said, "Yes. I'm still alive. I came at night because I have something important to discuss. Let's talk inside."

"Of course!" Charles said quickly, stepping aside to welcome her in.

As they entered the living room, Gatlin and Eloisa came rushing down in their pajamas, just as Charles did.

To the Henderson family, Elliana was no less than a savior. She had healed Charles' legs and brought Barbara back from the verge of death.

Gatlin's and Eloisa's eyes glistened with gratitude, and the latter's shone brightest. Her tears streamed freely as she looked at Elliana.

For years, Eloisa had lived a mother's nightmare—one child gone missing since the tender age of two, one stuck in a wheelchair, and the last one left paralyzed. Elliana had pulled her out of that dark abyss by healing two of her children. For this, Eloisa held Elliana in high regard.

Eloisa clasped Elliana's hands tightly, her voice trembling. "Ms. Marsh, thank heavens you're alive! I always believed that a life savior like you would be blessed and wouldn't die so untimely."

Gatlin's voice joined hers, heavy with emotion. "Yes, Ms. Marsh. I always suspected that you were still out there."

"Dad, Mom, Ms. Marsh must be tired after traveling over so late. Let her rest a bit," Charles said.

Eloisa quickly wiped her tears and guided Elliana to the sofa.

Gatlin and Charles sat respectfully on either side, their gazes on Elliana warm and full of gratitude.

Eloisa leaned closer, studying Elliana's face. Suddenly, she smiled. "I always said, once you took off your disguise, you'd be breathtaking. So when the butler said you looked beautiful, I wasn't the least surprised!"

Elliana smiled gently. "Mrs. Henderson, I hope my late-night visit hasn't caused you any trouble."

"Of course not!" Eloisa replied, holding Elliana's hand as if she would never let go. "You're welcome anytime, and we'll always be thrilled to have you!"

"Indeed!" Gatlin added. "We eagerly await your visits!"

Charles didn't speak, but his quiet smile said the same.

Just then, hurried footsteps echoed from the stairs.

Barbara came rushing down, her hair loose, pajamas flowing, her bare feet skipping steps in her haste. Before reaching the bottom, she cried out, "Elliana!"

The next moment, Barbara dashed to Elliana's side, clutching her hand tightly. "You're finally here! I've missed you so much."

Elliana fondly ruffled Barbara's hair.

Ever since taking the Lunathorn Elliana brought from Podgend, Barbara's health had improved remarkably. Her face glowed with color, her eyes sparkled, and the frail girl she once was seemed like a distant memory.

As Barbara held onto her, Elliana quietly checked her condition and nodded with relief. "Barbara, you've recovered wonderfully. But you still

"Don't worry, Elliana," Barbara said with a bright smile. "I've followed everything you told me. I'm back in school now, and I'm preparing for SAT's next year."

At fourteen, Barbara had been paralyzed. Now, at seventeen, the chance to sit for her exams was like reclaiming the years she had lost.

Elliana gently patted her head. "Congratulations on returning to school. I'm sure you'll do great in your exams."

Elliana's words moved the entire Henderson family to tears. For so long, they had only prayed that Barbara might survive. Never had they dreamed she would one day walk back into school and dream of college.

Barbara's voice quivered with gratitude. "Elliana, I owe this new life to you. I don't even know how to thank you."

Elliana patted her hand with quiet assurance. "There's no need for thanks. Healing is a doctor's duty. I only did what I was meant to do."

Elliana meant every word. As the successor of the Medical Codex, her life's mission was to save lives.

To avoid more tears and thanks, Elliana quickly steered the conversation. "Now, let's get to the important matter."
