

Chapter 643 One And Only

A sly smile curled on Trinity's lips as she watched the crowd's fury toward Lilah spread like wildfire. At last, she had found a way to vent the jealousy and spite festering in her heart. So what if Lilah had stolen Cole's affection? In the end, she would fall just like Elliana had.

Trinity's plan was simple. First, she'd use public opinion to shred Lilah's reputation until Lilah became an outcast in Ublento. Then, she would stir Wanda's rage, pushing her to do what she had once done to Elliana—claim Lilah's life with an "accident."

But then, Trinity surmised that maybe she wouldn't even need to try. Wanda's jealousy burned hotter than hers, and Wanda's cruelty knew no bounds. Chances were, Wanda had already set her sights on Lilah.

Pulling out her phone, Trinity scrolled through the latest headlines. As expected, the internet was drowning in venom—comment after comment branding Lilah as the tramp who had wrecked the Campbell heiress's engagement. The sheer flood of hatred spoke volumes. Wanda must have poured a fortune into hiring swarms of internet trolls.

Trinity's heart bubbled with delight. She nearly burst out laughing. Lilah's sweet moment in the spotlight, born from Cole's love confession, was already crumbling. Her glory had vanished as quickly as it came.

Just then, a gasp cut through the crowd. "Oh my! Milton, the heir to the Sun Group, just updated with a post!"

The Sun Group had always been a shadowy giant—low-key yet powerful, its financial grip stretching across the globe. Few even knew of its existence, let alone the Campbell family behind it.

But everything had changed when Arthur, along with Milton, arrived in Ublento in search of his beloved wife and daughter. They had lifted the veil of secrecy. The Sun Group was no longer hidden.

Later on, when Milton signed a public partnership with Ublento Medical University and appeared at its grand opening, people had finally seen the face of the conglomerate's heir—a refined, handsome Milton Campbell.

Though Milton's social media account was only days old, his followers had already soared into the tens of millions. Without a single post, his profile had been flooded daily with curious visitors. Fame had embraced him without effort. Now, with his very first post, the internet was ablaze. In seconds, it drew over ten thousand comments, the numbers climbing higher by the minute.

At the shout, a wave of phones shot up as the crowd scrambled onto the social platform, eager to see what Milton had posted.

Trinity, who had secretly followed Milton too, was no different. She unlocked her phone in haste, her clique doing the same.

The moment Milton's post appeared on their screens, Trinity and her clique froze. Their jaws dropped, their faces blank, as if lightning had struck them out of a clear sky.

The crowd reacted no differently. Silence swept over them before erupting into shocked voices.

Milton's post was simple—just a single photo and a caption.

The photo was a selfie of him and Lilah, leaning close together, smiling naturally at the camera from inside Arthur's study. It was warm, intimate, and unforced. They looked nothing like lovers, but the bond in their eyes was undeniable. The photo breathed of kinship, clear and unshakable.

And then came the shocking caption. "Allow me to introduce my sister—my one and only, full-blooded sister. I, Milton Campbell, have only one sister. The Campbell family has only one legitimate daughter."

He never once mentioned Wanda's name, yet every word struck her like a slap in the face.

Wanda had paraded around with the claim of being the Campbell daughter, enjoying the envious glances and respect that came from it, but with one post, Milton had revealed the truth for all the world to see.

Trinity felt the sting, too. She had flaunted her bond with Wanda, proud that Wanda was the Campbell family's jewel, supported by both the Campbells and the Evans. Now, that pride turned to ash.

Trinity stared blankly at her screen, her thoughts spinning in disbelief. Wanda had sworn Arthur had only one child—Milton. No daughter. How then could a legitimate Campbell daughter suddenly appear? And worse, how could it be Lilah—the very woman she loathed with every fiber of her being? What nightmare had she just stumbled into?

While Trinity stood dumbfounded, the crowd burst into a storm of chatter.

"Oh my! Lilah is Milton's real sister!"

"So she really is a rich heiress from overseas! Her father is Arthur Campbell, head of the Sun Group! That family is top-tier—world-class rich!"