

WILL OF CHAOS

Chapter 1 Cap 1: The Day That Everything Changed(Chapter Preview)

My name is Albert I am an orphan, I was left at the door of the orphanage as a baby, I have always had a weak constitution and health and that is probably why I was abandoned by my parents.

My name was chosen by the director of the orphanage a priest who was always very good to me, his name was Mario a big man of 1.92 tall, who came from Mexico to the United States when he was 20 years old and never came back.

He was always a father figure to me, he always greeted me with a smile when I returned from a foster home, as I spent a decade going back and forth from over 37 foster homes.

Most of the time for the same reason, couples who saw that I was a little smarter and more mature than others my same age and chose me, but as the time I spent with them increased they saw that I had health and a fragile body and that would bring a lot more expenses with doctors and medicines that they imagined at first and sent me back to the orphanage.

I always felt out of place and out of place, the way I saw the world was different from other people, the line of right is wrong in my eyes was not so clear to me, it seemed more than the extremes Good and evil were crazy in my eyes and a big gray field existed between them and that's where all the people were in my conception.

The orphanage didn't have a lot of money and I couldn't afford to buy the medicines and doctors I needed more and the years, so I had to find ways to give back to these people at the orphanage who were always there for me.

The orphanage didn't have much but I still had some old computers donated that I used to study a lot of things to try to help Father Mario and the children of the orphanage as best I can.

I always had a good memory and creativity so I was able to quickly learn a lot of things.

I learned about cooking to try to make the food with cheap ingredients we received as a donation as tasty and nutritious as possible for everyone.

I learned crafts with the mentality of fixing or replacing dishes and pans that were cracked and broken, which turned out to be an excellent idea.

I spent my days researching many things in the morning and the afternoon I taught and trained the children with things that interested them so that they would have some starting point when they were adults at least.

As I was always good at math and got used to using the computer, I decided to try to learn programming logic to see if I could create programs that I could sell online to get some money.

In just a few months I realized I had decent talent and had the great idea to start creating some simple games for kids to have fun with.

But first I had to build a simple video game console with the parts I asked some kids to pick up from the junkyard, it took weeks of trial and error to get something usable at least.

I started with simple 2D games like Pacn which was a poorly made copy of the original but the kids loved it and I was inspired to create more over the months and years that passed.

Over time I started creating new and original games that I started selling online and gave almost all the money to the orphanage and the rest I used for new equipment to continue this career that allowed me to work even with this fragile body.

When I reached adulthood by law I used the money to buy a house nearby and I continued to create a lot of games for years and I always shared it with orphanages and charities.

I started to research many things to be able to use in the games I created, such as crafts, cooking, medicine, all kinds of mythology and world legends, forge, martial arts (without weapons and with weapons), commerce, politics, military tactics, etc. ...

One subject that caught my attention was monsters and the various other races of humanoids that were described in games, movies, novels, mangas, etc...

As I continued to research Elves, Dwarves, Demons, Slimes, Goblins, Arachnes, and many others, I realized the incredible potential they all had and was so underused in games and stories.

All of them had amazing abilities that if trained and perfected would have an incredible result, especially if you consider the evolution system that many games use on monsters.

I will not deny that during my research I found the bodies of humanoid women of these other races that I found very attractive descriptions and images.

The possibilities for growth are infinite, there are no limits that cannot be surpassed, only weak wills to try is what Father Mario always told me every day.

As time went by, I related all this research to my games, making them unique in the world and I ended up becoming a famous game creator, but my health and body just got weaker and weaker and eventually let me get out of bed for years old.

Father Mario always came to visit me until the day of his death, which was the saddest day of my life, I was always different and thought of things that didn't even cross other people's heads, always running away from common sense without realizing it and because of that people did not understand me and walked away from me except for Father Mário.

The only reason I never felt alone was him and when he was gone I fell into a pit of despair and loneliness that I almost couldn't get out of.

So I drowned in work trying to move on somehow taking years to get back to feeling normal again but still with this emptiness inside me. My games became more and more detailed and the monsters portrayed in them were known as the toughest in the world which made me very happy.

I was already 47 years old and had not been able to get out of the hospital bed for 10 years, having to work and live there, I felt that something was growing inside me but I didn't know what until the day I finished and launched my work online press, it was very difficult and time-consuming to finish it thanks to the comas and fainting that became more and more frequent without knowing if I would be able to wake up next time, but luckily I managed.

That day I felt great relief and I saw all my life until that moment with a great feeling of accomplishment passing through my eyes and suddenly it was like something was waking up inside of me and I passed out.

During my fainting it was as if something was calling me from a distant place, I didn't know what it was or where it was but I knew it was calling me.

And a chaotic road of April ahead of me I didn't understand anything and I was confused but I felt I had to answer this call.

I have had no attachment to this world in so many years why not heed that call and the moment that thought crossed my mind I felt like I had been ripped from where I was and being sucked somewhere else along this road. chaotic.
