

Chapter 1419

In Sumeria, Luna was already waiting at the airport when Andrius returned.

"Hubby!" She smiled when she saw him, looking refreshed. "Is everything resolved? Did you find any clues about the Flame Emperor?"

"More or less." Andrius smiled and got into Luna's car.

Luna naturally drove Andrius to the Crestfalls'.

Belarus was overjoyed when he saw Andrius and briskly walked over with his cane. "Andrius, it's been a while since I saw you. Stay for dinner today."

"Okay, Grandpa Belarus." Andrius had no plans, so he agreed.

Then, when Harry and the others went in to cook, Belarus dragged him to the stone table to play chess.

After several rounds, the board was reset again. However, Belarus held a white piece but did not move. Instead, he stared blankly at the board.

"Grandpa Belarus..." Andrius called out softly when he noticed this.

Belarus seemed to be startled and sighed heavily.

Andrius hurriedly asked, "What's wrong, Grandpa Belarus? Did something happen?"

Belarus stared at the chessboard and shook his head. "Pawn, rook, bishop, knights... All the pieces are here on the board, but I still feel like something's missing."

The statement confused Andrius, and he instinctively asked, "What's missing?"

"I remember!" Belarus raised his head, his eyes piercing Andrius. "I'm missing a great-grandson!"

Andrius was speechless while Luna, who was bringing in tea, blushed.

Although Andrius and her had been intimate multiple times, hearing Belarus say it openly made her feel extremely embarrassed.

"I..." Andrius did not know how to respond.

Just then, Harry shouted from inside, "Dad! Andrius! Dinner is ready."

Andrius felt like he had found a lifeline. "Let's have dinner first, Grandpa Belarus."

Then, he fled from the table.

"Sigh, that boy..." Belarus looked at Andrius' figure and shook his head.

At the dining table, Andrius chatted casually with the Crestfalls, but his mind was thinking about the events in Murrfield.

The turmoil at the cordillera and the insects in the water supply...

Those two incidents seemed unrelated, but there was a mastermind linking them together behind the scenes. That was just the tip of the iceberg in this mysterious chess game.

He wondered what would happen next.

At that thought, Andrius lost his appetite and mood.

"Andrius. Andrius?"

Seeing his expression, Belarus called out several times before Andrius responded, "What's up, Grandpa Belarus?"

"You look distracted. Did something happen?" Belarus stared at him.

Luna also looked at him in concern.

"Well..." Andrius thought about it and recounted recent events, telling them about the turmoil in Murrfield, the insects among the refugees, and the cunning and important yet untouchable Carl Fields.

"Carl Fields..."

"Seabreeze Mineral Water?"

"Who do they think they are? How dare they be so arrogant?"

"Don't worry, Andrius. We'll make preparations and bring down that company!"

"That's right, it's just a small drinking water company. You don't know how influential New Moon Corporation is now!"

...

The Crestfalls clamored, claiming to help Andrius deal with Carl and his company.

"Enough!"

Amidst the noise, Belarus' powerful shout interrupted everyone. The hall fell silent.

"Andrius is right."

