My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1451– Good Enough If The Cooperation Went On Smoothly

Although the photo the reporter took showed a woman standing by the helicopter's cabin door, Xander knew the person behind this was Byron.

He thought the scandal that evening about the celebrities had ended this matter. The following morning, he wanted to get some information from Rosalie by using the project as an excuse.

Unexpectedly, Rosalie's assistant told him Rosalie was not in the research institute.

It was the same answer for days.

Xander had realized the problem because it was simple.

Rosalie must have left with Byron!

He wanted to see when they would come back!

Unexpectedly, they took a week to return!

During that week, Xander's anger rose!

"Our project is about to start, but the person in charge of the research institute is nowhere to be seen. Miss Jacobs, what should I say about this?"

He sounded displeased even when he spoke to Rosalie.

Rosalie felt momentary guilt when Xander mentioned the project. Thus, she put on a humble attitude and said, "I'm so sorry about it. I had to hide from the limelight for a while because of some personal reasons. Please accept my apology if it has affected the project. I understand why you're angry, Young Master Xander."

Then, she promised, "I promise I won't go missing again after the project begins. I'll be where you can find me, Young Master Xander."

Her apology had appeased Xander's fury, and he did not question her about where she went with Byron or what she did that week.

It did not matter to him at all.

It would not matter even if many things happened between Rosalie and Byron. Xander was confident of winning Rosalie's heart as long as she was still around him.

He felt better with that in mind. His tone gradually calmed down, but there was still a hint of grievance in it. "You made me go to the research institute so many times for nothing. Miss Jacobs, don't you think you should do something to make up for me? Just an apology isn't sincere enough."

Rosalie noticed the change in his tone and was relieved. She smiled and said, "Of course. Young Master Xander, when are you free? I'll buy you a meal."

Xander would, of course, accept it. "Sure, but I'll decide the time and venue. Miss Jacobs, be prepared to treat me to an expensive meal."

The topic between them was more relaxed now, and Rosalie smiled. "Paying an expensive meal would be worth it if it can appease your anger, Young Master Xander."

Xander seized the opportunity. "By the way, we have to discuss the project's progress. We intended to start the project early when you weren't around, but we delayed it for quite some time because we wanted to wait for you."

Rosalie felt bad and apologized again.

"Anyways, it's already delayed. What else can we do? It'd be nice if we can work things out after this. I still believe in the ability of your research institute."

Xander quickly ended the topic.

They exchanged a few words of pleasantries and hung up.

Rosalie turned around and looked at Linda as she said, "You're right. Young Master Xander was indeed angry, but it's my fault. Have the other projects in the research institute been delayed as well?"

Linda shook her head. "Everything is fine."

Then, she looked at Rosalie and asked cautiously, "Dr.

Jacobs, about the news two days ago, should I..."

Before she could finish her words, Rosalie knew what she was about to ask. She explained, "Don't believe what's on the internet. The Lancer family is an important business partner to us. Just treat Young Master Xander like usual."

After getting a clear response, Linda nodded.

After a while, Xander texted Rosalie the time and venue of the meal.

Rosalie glanced at the message and left the research institute after instructing Linda about some work-related matters.

The venue Xander chose was a teahouse with a vintage atmosphere. It was a style the Lancer family liked most.

When Rosalie arrived, Xander was already waiting for her inside. Upon seeing her, he beckoned her to approach him.

Rosalie stepped into the place and sat down opposite him.

This time, they sat in the corner, and there was a sandalwood-scented decoration by the table.

Perhaps accustomed to the smell of traditional herbs, Rosalie felt strangely comfortable with the scent assailing her nostrils.

She did not think much of it and took it as part of the vintage decorations in this teahouse.

“I’m sorry that I’m late again.”

After taking her seat, Rosalie apologized to Xander embarrassedly.

The meeting was meant to apologize for the delay due to her absence, but unexpectedly, she was late.

That was inappropriate.

Xander smiled and did not seem to mind. He poured her a cup of tea and said, “It’s alright. This teahouse is quite far from your research institute, and I happened to be nearby.”

While Xander spoke, he seemed to touch the scented decoration unintentionally.

Rosalie looked at his expression and was relieved he was okay with it.

"I should be the one apologizing to you instead," Xander blurted out.

Rosalie was confused to hear him say that.

She had no idea why Xander mentioned he should apologize to her.

"Speaking of which, I was the cause of the rumors."

Xander looked at Rosalie apologetically. "If I hadn't changed the time and met you at night, the reporters wouldn't have taken photos of us, and the netizens wouldn't have spread rumors like that."

Rosalie felt a complicated feeling rising deep down when she heard him mentioning the rumors from before.

Speaking of which, this matter did happen because Xander changed their lunch meeting to dinner.

Seemingly seeing through her thoughts, Xander explained sincerely, "I really had something on that noon. Lancer Corporation's branch company for medical herbs was facing a problem, and they needed me to go there urgently to settle it."

Rosalie did not blame him for it, but she still felt everything that night was too much of a coincidence.

However, since Xander had explained in detail, she quickly said, "I know it's not your fault. We didn't know reporters were secretly following US."

Besides, everything has been settled."

Then, Xander suddenly said something out of nowhere, "So, you got back together with President Lawrence."

That caught Rosalie off guard, and she did not know how to answer him.

It was not easy to explain what happened between her and Byron...

Xander's gaze turned gloomy when he noticed that Rosalie did not deny it.

When Rosalie looked at him, he hid his emotion and asked with concern, "So, you must've been with him during this time."

Rosalie did not deny it this time and simply explained, "It's because we needed to get away from the media and reporters for some time."

She said nothing about where they were and what they did.

That made Xander feel more displeased. Deciding not to make himself more unhappy, he diverted the topic to work.

“During your absence, I did some homework on developing the new medicine, and I think we may change the direction. Recently, there has been a shortage of anti-cancer medication in the market, especially those dominated by traditional medicine.”

Rosalie’s expression was serious again, and she focused on work. “I’ve noticed this before, but I think it’s a little difficult. After all, people still rely on drugs to fight cancer.”

Xander explained to Rosalie briefly the research he did and concluded it.” Why can’t we be the first to venture into this part of the field?”

Rosalie was a little moved upon hearing his explanation.

“However, I’m not an expert in cancer to support the medication research.”

She was still hesitant.

In recent years, she studied traditional medicine practices rather than medicinal materials.

Now, when it came to herbs to treat cancer, Rosalie was not confident.

Xander seemed to understand her concern and said, “To be honest with you, several of the Lancer family’s existing medical books have records in this aspect of research, but because of the ancient technical problems, our ancestors did not study it thoroughly. It was these medical books that inspired me.”

Rosalie’s eyes lit up in joy upon hearing that. She looked at the man before her.

If she could read these medical books, perhaps she could get some inspiration.

However, that was the private asset of the Lancer family, and she was still determining if they were willing to let her use them as a reference.

"I've given you some books on traditional medicine before, and those are a part of them. If you're interested, I can show you all of them," Xander continued.

Rosalie nodded without hesitation. Then, she realized what Xander had said and asked carefully, "Are you sure you can show them to me just like that? Aren't those books part of the confidential documents of the Lancer family?"

Those families with medical backgrounds had some skills that they would not share with outsiders.

Before this, Xander had shared the technique of Heavenly Thirteen, and Rosalie was already flattered by that.

Now, he said he would show her those medical books. However, Rosalie felt it was inappropriate for him to do so.

Xander lifted his eyebrows and smiled. "Sure enough, I can hide nothing from you. You do have to fulfill some conditions to get to read those books."

"What conditions?" Rosalie frowned and felt something was not quite right.

Xander said, "As you said, those are confidential secrets of the Lancer family. If you want to read them, you must get a new teacher. That means you have to break off your student-teacher relationship with Professor Luke and be a student of the Lancer family."

As if afraid Rosalie might reject him, Xander tried to lure her. "These contents are not what an ordinary student can read. Only those with outstanding medical skills who Old Master Xander recognizes will have the chance to read the books. There are only three people in my generation in the Lancer family who got to read these books. If you join US, you'll be the fourth."

If it were others, they would agree without hesitation if Xander offered them this.

After all, Rosalie had already learned everything from her teacher, and leaving him would not affect her knowledge.

However, Rosalie rejected it decisively. "If that's the case, I'll reject your offer."

Xander's expression turned gloomy. "Why? Don't you want to read those books? Aren't you curious about the Lancer family's medical skills?"

If he remembered correctly, Rosalie agreed to go to those free clinics because she wanted to read some of the Lancer family's medical books.

Rosalie nodded calmly. "Of course, I want to read them. However, I can't abandon my teacher just for a few medical books. My teacher has helped me a lot, and he's more than my teacher."

A glimpse of cold intent flashed across Xander's eyes.

He had thought that if Rosalie agreed to his offer and became a part of the Lancer family, it would be another way he could keep her by his side.

Unexpected, she rejected!

"If you put it like that, I'll sound selfish if I try to persuade you anymore."

Suppressing his anger, Xander plastered a smile, pretending not to mind it as he said, "However, I hope you won't regret making this decision today, Miss Jacobs."

Unsure if it were her imagining things, she felt that Xander's attitude toward her now differed from before.

"I won't regret it. Young Master Xander, if you still wish to cooperate with our research institute. I'll do my best to cooperate."

She tried to put away her concern about Xander's change in attitude and assured Xander with a smile.

Xander lifted his teacup and said, "Let's toast with tea instead of wine for our future cooperation in the new project."

Rosalie raised her cup and clinked it with his.

After that, they briefly discussed the research project and decided on the starting time and the time when Lancer Corporation would provide the medicinal herbs of the agreed quantity to the research institute.

By the time they had finished their discussion, it was evening.

Rosalie excused herself and looked at the time. It was time for the kids to get off school.

When Linda called to ask if she needed to pick up the kids from kindergarten, Rosalie refused her offer.

She had been busy with her work, and the kids had complained several times that they wanted her to pick them up from school.

According to the result of her discussion with Xander, she would be busy again soon. Thus, she decided to take the opportunity now to spend time with the little ones.

With that in mind, Rosalie drove to the kindergarten.

When she was at the kindergarten gate, the kids lined up and walked out of the classrooms under the teacher's lead.

However, she saw a new face beside Miss Leigh Ann. She seemed to be a new teacher. She looked gentle and caring.

"Mis Jacobs, Ms. Crane is a new teacher in our kindergarten. She'll be teaching Lucian and Nox's class with me."

Miss Leigh Ann introduced her to Rosalie.

Upon hearing that lady was her children's new teacher, Rosalie smiled politely at her and greeted, "Hello, Ms. Crane. Nice to meet you."

Lucille sized up Rosalie, who was standing before her calmly.

Before returning to the country, she had heard Wendy complaining about Rosalie on the phone. Wendy said Rosalie was the woman who snatched President Lawrence of Lawrence Corporation from her.

Therefore, it sparked Lucille's curiosity about what kind of a woman Rosalie was.

Now it seemed Rosalie did have the potential to snatch men from other women if she used her appearance.

She gathered her thoughts and exchanged pleasantries with Rosalie gently and politely.

Soon, more parents arrived, and Rosalie took her kids and bid farewell to the teachers.

"Do you like the new teacher?"

On the way back, she asked with concern.

The little ones looked at each other with strange expressions on their little faces.

Puzzled, Rosalie asked, "What happened? You guys don't like her?"

Nox said frankly, "No. We just think she's quite strange. She's always staring at US."

During the group activity, the new teacher had tried to approach them countless times, yet other kids came in between, and she did not manage to do so.

Rosalie glanced at the kids through the rearview mirror apologetically. "I'm sorry. It's probably because of what happened two days ago. Ms. Crane is a new teacher, and it's unavoidable that she would be more curious about you guys."

Before this, when Byron told everyone the little boys were his children, not only the little ones, but even Rosalie experienced weird stares from her colleagues at work.

Presumably, the new teacher was just as curious about them just like her colleagues.

"If you don't like it, I'll talk to Miss Leigh Ann tomorrow and ask her to talk to Ms. Crane about it," suggested Rosalie.

The little ones nodded obediently.

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1455– Admit Those Brats' Identities

Rosalie's life was starting to get back on track, while Byron's was still a little messed up.

In the evening, after dealing with Lawrence Corporation's work that had piled up these days, Byron pondered if he should visit Rosalie's place.

However, he received a call from his mother, asking him to head home soon.

Upon hearing his mother's displeased tone through the phone, Byron's forehead puckered. Instead of heading to Rosalie's place, he decided to head back to Lawrence Manor.

Just as he entered the manor, he saw Melody sitting on the sofa.

"What are you doing here?" he frowned and asked.

Melody turned around and reprimanded, "I wouldn't even have known that you were back if I didn't visit your place."

Byron and Rosalie did not mention to anyone that they went abroad.

Melody had come looking for her son to get an explanation for that matter, but he was not at home for days.

Every time she mentioned Rosalie and the two boys, Byron brushed her off and cut off the call.

Melody had nowhere to vent her anger.

Finally, they were back, and Melody would not let go of the opportunity to talk to her son about this.

Byron knew she did not come to have a peaceful conversation with him. He put on a stern look and walked to the sofa. Instead of sitting, he stood before her, obviously not wanting to have a long conversation with his mother.

Noticing his intention, Melody's expression was gloomy. "What do you mean by this? Are you already going to speak up for that Jacobs woman even before she marries you?"

Byron was used to her hostility toward Rosalie and sounded calm when he said, "I'm speaking up for her because you were unfriendly to her. If you could be less hostile to her, I'm willing to speak to you joyfully, as I'm sure we both want a happy atmosphere in the family."

"How dare you say that to me?!" Melody slammed her palm on the table. "What about the two kids? Don't you know your identity? How could you tell everyone those two brats are yours? You even came up with a story of their identities."

Byron looked at Melody calmly, showing not even the slightest bit of regret.

Melody was so pissed off. "Do you know how many relatives called to ask me about this? They even prepared welcome gifts for the two bastards!"

"What do you expect me to tell them?"

Those relatives were so eager to flatter the Lawrence family that they believed the announcement and wanted to celebrate the return of the two little boys by preparing a welcoming party for them.

Anger shot through Melody, and she almost fainted when she heard that.

Throwing a welcoming party for those two brats was impossible! Byron was doing this absurdly, yet she was not out of her mind like him.

However, since her son announced it publicly, Melody could not deny it and only brushed their relatives off.

The expression on Byron's face did not change the slightest as though they really should celebrate the little ones' return.

"I've asked for Rosalie's hand in marriage, and she promised to marry me sooner or later. Lucian and Nox are not bastards. They'll be my kids in the future. Since our relatives asked you about them, you can admit that they're both the young masters of the Lawrence family." 1

Melody could take it no more and felt dizzy again.

Hearing her son admit it in person was more shocking than reading the announcement online.

Her son was planning to make those brats part of the Lawrence family, said, "No. Many people are eyeing the Lawrence family's assets. Even those relatives wish they can get a part of what we own, yet now you want to hand over what we have to those two bas... kids. I won't agree to that."
