My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1456– Needed Identities

Melody did not think she was doing anything wrong. She was only thinking on behalf of the Lawrence family. On the contrary, Byron was getting more and more insensible.

Then, she looked at her son expectantly, hoping he would understand.

Unexpectedly, Byron still looked at her indifferently and did not change his mind. “Most of Lawrence Corporation’s success today is because of me. So, it’s my choice to choose who I should distribute the assets.”

As long as the boys were capable, he would not mind handing Lawrence Corporation to them.

Melody could barely catch her breath upon hearing this.

“Moreover, they’re so young. Don’t you think it’s too early to worry about this now?” Byron glanced at his mother.

Melody wanted to continue to persuade Byron, but he interrupted her. “As for you, you’re getting old and don’t have to meddle with all these anymore. I can deal with my own matters. If you have so much leisure time, why don’t you go on a trip with Dad? It would be good for your health.”

Then, Byron headed upstairs without giving Melody a chance to speak anymore.

Looking at her son leaving, Melody’s anger shot through her. “What do you mean? Stand right there!”

As if he did not hear her, Byron walked to his room.

“Calm down, Mrs. Lawrence.”

Mrs. Zora noticed Melody’s anger and was afraid she would pass out. Hence, Mrs. Zora brought a cup of tea for Melody.

Melody was more enraged by her presence and scolded, “Are you also making fun of me? Do you want that Jacobs woman to get back together with Byron?”

Mrs. Zora sighed silently and said, “Young Mr. Lawrence...”

'Who gave you permission to call her that?' Melody snapped and lost her composure. "Remember this! She'll never marry Byron again as long as I'm still alive."

Mrs. Zora could only remain silent. However, deep down, she hoped Rosalie would return soon and Melody would change her mind.

Melody did not want to have another word with Mrs. Zora and sat on the sofa to calm down. Then, she strode out of the manor in anger.

Just as she returned to the Lawrence family's mansion, Benedict happened to return home too. Looking at her angry expression, Benedict was puzzled and asked with concern, 'What happened? Why do you look so angry?'

His voice reminded her of what her son had said, and her subsided anger flared up again. "Why are you asking me? Go and ask your son!"

Benedict sat beside her. "What happened to Byron?"

He never meddled in Byron's relationship. To him, Byron was an adult and would deal with his own affairs, but he knew his wife cared about Byron.

Since the engagement between Byron and Wendy was resolved now, Benedict felt that Byron had already decided on his marriage.

Thus, he could not understand why his wife was still pissed off.

Melody glared at Benedict and said, "Didn't you see the announcement Byron made through Lawrence Corporation? Byron is out of his mind! You, as his father, don't even care about him!"

Hearing his wife's accusation, Benedict was dumbstruck.

Of course, he had seen the announcement.

However, the two little boys needed identities if his son wanted to get back together with Rosalie.

Rather than letting them join the family unannounced, this lie would save them a lot of trouble later.

This was crucial in getting Rosalie to marry Byron again.

Getting no response from Benedict annoyed Melody more, and she asked, "Do you also think he did nothing wrong?"

Benedict knitted his eyebrows together and sounded helpless.

“I’ve told you before that you should let him handle his own marriage. Children and grandchildren have their lives. We don’t have to interfere so much.”

Melody disapproved of Benedict’s perception. “No, I can’t just let him be. Is his marriage his matter? It would be fine if he’s marrying some other woman, but...

“Of all people, he wants to marry that Jacobs woman who even has two brats!”

Benedict could see Melody was displeased with Rosalie. However, he still spoke to her patiently, “No matter who Byron marries, it’s his matter. He’s an adult. We can’t interfere with everything he does.”

Melody refused to give in and continued complaining, “If he had married Wendy years ago, it wouldn’t have ended like this.”

Then, she glanced at her husband beside her and blamed him for it. “It’s your fault for letting him do as he wishes. That’s why he dragged on his marriage with Wendy until today.”

“Facts have proved that Wendy isn’t the right person for Byron.”

Benedict did not think his son had done anything wrong.

Melody refuted, “Wendy did all that because she was anxious about her marriage with Byron. If Byron had married her long ago, she wouldn’t have done anything silly like that.”

Benedict looked at Melody helplessly and seemed to be doubting her words.

Melody felt a little guilty upon being stared at like that and muttered, “I don’t mean that what Wendy did was right. It’s just that I think Wendy is sincere to Byron...”

Recalling the pathetic situation of the Fuller family, Melody sighed and said, “The Fuller family is our family friend, and we’ve known each other for years. Now, we’ve put them in a situation like this, making it seem like we’re merciless.”

Benedict knew the situation the Fuller family was in and did not think Byron had dealt with that matter badly either.

Since Wendy dared to hurt someone from the Lawrence family, she should be punished.

As for the Quinton family taking advantage of the situation, it was only part of business competitions. It was not something that could be defined as either good or bad.

“Benedict, why don’t you convince Byron to spare the Fuller family? They’ve already learned their lesson.”

Melody grabbed Benedict’s arm and complained, “Byron won’t listen to what I say. Only you can change his mind.”

Benedict placed his hand on hers, trying to appease her.

‘To put it bluntly, the current situation of the Fuller family is caused by business competition, and we can’t do anything about it. What’s more, if it gets out that the Fuller family has bullied our family and we’re still helping them, won’t the Lawrence family be a target to those who have been eyeing us?’

His tone was gentle, but it was firm.

Melody could only give up her thoughts since it was about the Lawrence family’s reputation.

However, she was still unwilling to accept Rosalie as part of the Lawrence family.

She sighed and asked intentionally, “Speaking of the Fuller family, how is Estie now?”

Benedict missed the little girl too and said, “If you’re worried about her, why don’t you visit her? I haven’t met Estie for quite some time. Maybe we can visit her one of these days.”

Melody looked at Benedict and pretended to sound helpless when she said, “I’d like to visit her, but Byron has sent Estie to Rosalie’s place. I want to visit Estie, but Rosalie refuses to let Estie approach me as though I’ll eat up my granddaughter.”

Benedict was puzzled. “Why? You’re Estie’s grandmother. Why wouldn’t she let you visit Estie? Is there any misunderstanding between you and her?”

Melody sighed sadly. ‘What misunderstanding can there be? She has had a grudge against me since she left six years ago. After she returned, I tried to get Wendy to marry Byron and restricted her from meeting Byron. I guess she hates me because of that.’

With that, she lowered her head and leaned her upper body on Benedict’s arm as if she had been suffering from grievances.

“She hasn’t got back together with Byron, yet she’s already treating me like this. What should I do if she marries Byron one day? Will she stop me from visiting my son and granddaughter?”

Benedict knew nothing about the previous conflicts between the two.

His first reaction was to try to settle the problem upon hearing his wife’s words.

‘There must have been a misunderstanding between you two. Just talk it out.’

He believed his son would never fall for a woman who was bad in character.

Melody noticed Benedict did not intend to help her and was anxious. She squeezed out a few drops of tears.

“It’s all my fault. I shouldn’t have interfered in her relationship with Byron, but it wasn’t me who forced her to leave six years ago. After she left, I looked for her for a long time. Now that she’s back, does she think the Lawrence family is a place she can come and go as she wishes?”

Benedict embraced her and said, “Let me ask Byron about this.”

Melody was satisfied with his reaction now.

Benedict took out his phone and dialed Byron’s number.

Byron was working in his study.

When he saw his father’s call, he immediately guessed that his mother had returned home and said something to him.

However, he knew that his father had never been much involved in his matters, especially his love life.

Without thinking much, Byron answered the call. "Dad, what's the matter?"

Benedict's voice came from the other end of the call. "Where's Estie now?"

"At her mother's place." Byron did not lie. "Why?"

"Your mother said that Rosalie is stopping Estie from getting close to her. What is this about? Does Rosalie have some misunderstanding about your mother?"

That was all Benedict could think of.

Byron knew that his mother would have told his father something, but he did not anticipate this.

He stopped what he was doing and patiently explained, "It's true that Estie and my mother aren't close anymore these days, but I can assure you that Rosalie has nothing to do with it."

Benedict looked at the woman in his embrace. "Do you mean it's your mother's fault?"

Byron thought of a better way to put this matter. After a moment of silence, he explained, "To be precise, there's a misunderstanding between my mother and Estie. Estie has been reluctant to get along with my mother recently, but it has nothing to do with Rosalie."

Estelle was reluctant to get along with Melody?

Benedict could not understand why.

They were with Estelle all her life and watched her grow up. Melody loved Estelle dearly, and he knew it.

All this while, Estelle was close to Melody. Why would their relationship change suddenly?

Byron could guess what Benedict was thinking and added, "If you're worried, you can go and visit Estie. I'll tell Rosalie about it, and you can visit her anytime."

Benedict wanted to see it and agreed without hesitation when Byron suggested this. "Okay. I'll pick Estie up from kindergarten tomorrow."
